House Quells Revolt, Passes Crop Control; Bill Now Up to Senate

Corn Group's Revision Effort Fails as Plan Passes, 267 to 130.

Permanent Quotas Set Up by Measure

More Drastic Proposal Center of Dispute in Upper Chamber.

By Robert C. Albright.

The Administration's long-range crop control bill yesterday was driven to final passage in the House by a 267-to-130 vote after a last-minute corn belt revolt nearly shunted the program back to committee.

The bill, strengthened by an eleventh-hour reversal restoring wheat compulsion, now goes to the Senate, which is grappling with a more drastic measure.

Leaders passed an agonizing half-hour just before passage when a corn bloc demanding mandatory loans attempted to recommit the bill for revision. The effort failed by the bare margin of 197 to 206.

Wins By 2-to-1 Margin.

Chairman Marvin Jones immediately moved for final passage, and won by a margin of nearly two to one as those who had joined in the rebellion hopped back on the bandwagon.

The bill, No. 1 item on the special session agenda, erects on the present soil conservation law a permanent production control system ranging from purely voluntary farm contracts and benefit payments to compulsory marketing quotas on five farm commodities—wheat, corn, cotton, tobacco and rice.

Through commodity loans and storage of surpluses, it introduces for the first time the ever-normal granary principle, designed to bring a "balanced flow" of farm products and bolster farm income. No means of financing the program through taxes is provided, and costs above the present $500,000,000 soil-conservation appropriation are indefinite.

Debate Was Stormy.

House passage followed two weeks of controversial debate and close splits and reversals on amendments that threatened at times to wreck the bill. But yesterday Chairman Jones successfully recouped all but one of the major setbacks.

An amendment by Representative Gerald J. Boileau (Progressive), of Wisconsin, designed to protect dairy interests from new competition, but actually having broader implications, was put to a roll-call test. Again Boileau triumphed, by a 202-to-188 vote.

The amendment would deny benefit payments to farmers using retired acreage to pasture dairy herds or grow other crops for market.

Provisions Salvaged.

But the leadership was successful in salvaging the original provisions of the bill on three other tests. A previously adopted amendment by Representative Harry B. Coffee (Democrat), of Nebraska, exempting wheat from compulsory marketing quotas, went down to roll-call defeat by a vote of 175 to 219. This leaves quota and penalty provisions in force on all five commodities.

An amendment by Representative A. F. Ford (Democrat), of Mississippi, to require that State cotton allotments be made on a State-wide rather than a county basis, was dropped from the bill by a voice vote.

Success of Chairman Jones on

Landon Spurns Candidacy for Election in '40

Hints Hoover Should Do Likewise to Clarify Political Picture.

By the Associated Press.

Alf M. Landon emphatically removed himself from the 1940 Presidential contest yesterday with a statement which knowing observers quickly interpreted as challenging Herbert Hoover to do the same thing.

For months, Landon and Hoover have been engaged in polite but none-the-less strenuous sparring about Republican policy, while some other Republicans have clamored for a re-examination of party philosophy and new blood in the leadership.

It was inevitable that Washington should bear these facts in mind in reading Landon's statement, particularly an assertion that:

"A man who is in the position of being suspected of being either an active or receptive candidate cannot render the service either to his party or to his country that I conceive to be my patriotic duty and responsibility in the critical situation confronting us."

Later in the day, leaving the White House after a visit with the President, Landon asserted Mr.

Accord Found With President On Profits Tax

Treasury and House Men, Roosevelt Agree Upon Changes Next Session.

House Ways and Means tax framers and Treasury officials yesterday reached "complete accord" with the President on proposed modification of the undivided profits tax early next session.

Further "adjustments" in the committee's tentative tax relief proposals, principally aimed at recouping lost revenue, were hinted following a White House conference on taxes.

But spokesmen made clear there was no thought of discarding the undivided profits tax principle in the "accord" reached yesterday.

"We think the philosophy of the undistributed earnings tax has a very proper place in the tax structure," said Representative Fred M. Vinson, of Kentucky, chairman of the House tax sub-committee.

Both Vinson and Chairman Robert L. Doughton, of the Ways and Means Committee, indicated a full statement of what the committee proposes to do in modifying both undivided profits and capital gains taxes will be made to the country before adjournment, and early legislative action was promised next session.

Treasury officials had been reported in disagreement with House Ways and Means committeemen on tax changes already voted prior to yesterday's White House meeting. Doughton and Vinson denied this following the conference.

"We are in accord on what we are doing and what we are going to do," said Doughton. "There is no disagreement and no friction so

On Relief at 64, She Will 'Go Back and See Broadway.'

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Dec. 10.—A frail little woman of 64, who was one of the famous Floradora Girls in the '90s, was anxious today to "go back and see Broadway" after claiming a $16,000 surprise inheritance left by her husband whom she divorced 41 years ago.

She was Mrs. Margaret B. Reeves who was located yesterday through relief records.

Her divorced husband, Willis H. Reeves, 77, died Sunday, leaving her his entire estate.

"I can't understand it, except that Willis loved me—perhaps too much," she said. "I didn't think he had a dime."

Mrs. Rooves said she divorced her husband in 1896 on grounds of incompatibility.

Pope Creates 2 New U. S. Archdioceses

Archbishops Set Over New Jersey and Kentucky-Tennessee.

Walsh to Occupy See at Newark, Floersh at Louisville.

In one of the most sweeping realignments of jurisdiction since the foundation of the Catholic Church in America, Pope Pius XI has created two new ecclesiastical provinces and three new bishoprics, it was announced here last night by the apostolic delegate.

Formerly part of the province of New York, the State of New Jersey now becomes an archdiocese with Newark as its metropolitan see. Bishop Thomas J. Walsh will be the first Archbishop of Newark.

The province of Newark, besides the metropolitan see and the existing diocese of Trenton, will contain two new dioceses, Camden and Paterson.

Kentucky and Tennessee, which previously belonged to the province of Cincinnati, will form the new archdiocese of Louisville. The Most Rev. John Floersh, now Bishop of Louisville, becomes archbishop.

New Diocese in Kentucky.

A new diocese of Owensboro, Ky., has been created in addition to the metropolitan see, and the present dioceses of Covington and Nashville.

The Louisville diocese is one of the oldest in the United States, having been originally designed as the diocese of Bardstown, Ky., when Baltimore, the first American bishopric, was divided in 1808.

The Province of Cincinnati, from which suffragan dioceses were taken this summer for the creation of the Archdiocese of Detroit, wil continue to have jurisdiction over Ohio and Indiana.

Bishops for the new dioceses will be announced at the public consistory to be held in Rome Thursday. At the sacred consistory Monday the pallium will be given by proxy to the Archbishops of Newark and Louisville, as well as those of Los Angeles and Detroit, who have been elevated to new archdioceses during the past year.

Catholic Population Growth.

Archbishop Amleto Giovani Cicognani, the apostolic delegate, said the new provinces had been created as a result of the growth of Catholic population in New Jersey, Kentucky and Tennessee.

With the formation of the new provinces, 5 of the 19 in this country will be the creation of Pope Pius. The Province of San Antonio, Tex., was established in 1926; Los Angeles, 1936, and Detroit, Newark and Louisville, 1937.

It also was disclosed last night the Pope has named the Right Rev. Stephen Woznicki titular Bishop of Pelte and auxiliary bishop to the Most Rev. Edward Mooney, Archbishop of Detroit. The new auxiliary bishop, who is 43, served for 18 years as secretary to the late Michael J. Gallagher, Bishop of Detroit.

Headless Skeleton Revives Mystery Of Justice Crater

St. Johnsbury, Vt., Dec. 10 (AP).—The headless skeleton of a man, which local authorities suggested "might be" that of Judge Joseph F. Crater, of New York, who disappeared in August, 1930, tonight drew the attention of New York police.

Sheriff Frederick A. Flint said he had sent to the New York missing persons bureau a full description of the skeleton and fragments of clothing found in the dense woods of Walden Mountain last Monday. He said "there are indications" the body might be that of Crater.

LinerPounds On Reef; 650 Wait Rescue

German Vessel Unable to Take Passengers Off; 2 From D.C. Aboard.

2 Destroyers on Way to President Hoover Off Formosa Isle.

By the Associated Press.

San Francisco, Dec. 10.—Rescue vessels tonight sped to the aid of the Transpacific luxury liner President Hoover, aground near Formosa, amid conflicting reports concerning the safety of 1,058 persons aboard.

Two United States destroyers left Manila under orders to proceed full speed to the $8,000,000 vessel, while two other Transpacific liners, the British Empress of Asia and the President McKinley were reported also rushing aid.

News advices received in Manila from Hongkong said the big Dollar Liner was pounding heavily with a hole forward in her hull and that efforts had been abandoned to transfer the 650 passengers and 408 crew members to the German vessel, Preussen, standing by.

The liner, sailing a new course between Japan and Manila, grounded early today on Hoishoto Island, described as 55 miles northeast of Formosa's southern tip.

Several hours prior to the Hongkong reports, a message from the President Hoover here said neither the ship nor those aboard were in immediate danger.

Positions of the rescue ships were not known here. Naval officials in Manila were uncertain when the destroyers would reach the scene. The Empress of Asia was reported due there early tomorrow.

The Preussen was summoned by distress calls sent by Capt. George Yardley, veteran commander of the Hoover.

Later a message, sent by Capt. Yardley, said:

"All safe. No danger. Vessel aground bow first, afloat aft. Some damage forward, extent of which cannot be determined at this time. German vessel Preussen standing by."

Bandits Seize Cab, Fire Upon Driver Who Pursues Pair

Two young bandits escaped from a cab-driver victim last night after he had leaped from his moving taxicab, and, disregarding their gunfire, commandeered an auto and gave chase. A few minutes before, the pair held up another cab driver in front of the White House.

The second victim, Cecil Curtis, colored, 23, of 1419 South Capitol street, told police the men entered his cab at Twelfth street and New York avenue northwest. In the 1200 block of Twentieth street northwest, he said, they robbed him of $3.50 at gun point, and then, apparently disappointed at their small haul, theratened to kill him.

Frightened, Curtis jumped just as one of the bandits opened fire. One of the bullets passed through his coat as he sprawled in the road and they drove off in the taxi. Curtis pursued the men to Dupont Circle, where they abandoned the cab and ran, cautioning him not to approach.

Earlier two men, said by police to be the same pair, held up another taxi driver, Melville W. Childs, 38, of 214 Emerson street northwest, in front of the White House.

Ten Naval Captains' Promotion To Rear Admirals Is Approved

37 Commanders Will Be Elevated to Rank of Captain.

President Roosevelt yesterday approved the promotion of ten captains to the rank of rear admiral and 37 commanders to the rank of captain. Retention on the active list of Comdr. Herbert R. Hein, until July 1, 1938, also was authorized.

Officers not recommended for promotion by the Navy Selection Board included Capt. Walter B. Woodson, naval aide to the President, and Comdr. Earl Winfield Spencer, first husband of the Duchess of Windsor.

Three officers approved for promotion to rear admiral already are serving in that rank by reason of the office they hold. They are William R. Furlong, chief of the Bureau of Ordance; Arthur B. Cook, chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics, and Harold G. Bowen, chief of the Bureau of Engineering.

The seven others who will be promoted to rear admiral were Capt. Herbert F. Leary, chief of staff and aide to the Battle Force commander; Capt. Chester W. 'Victorious Entry' Made, Tokyo Radios Envoys Throughout World.

Mountain Above City Also Taken

Desperate Resistance Offered by Chinese; 3 Entries Still Held.

By the Associated Press.

Shanghai (Saturday) Dec. 11.—Japanese announced their "grand offensive" against Nanking was launched at 10 a. m. today, after their troops had gained a foothold within the abandoned Chinese capital.

The invaders were reported battering at key gates in the formidable walls of Nanking after a detachment of infantrymen fought through Kuanghuamen, the southeastern gate, late yesterday into the city's streets.

[In Tokyo, the Japanese foreign office announced "the imperial army has made a victorious entry into Nanking."

[Emperor Hirohito was informed the Japanese flag was planted on Nanking's walls and was said to have expressed his gratification.

[The foreign office announcement of the "victorious entry" was sent to all embassies and consulates by radio.]

Fighting in Streets.

(Domei—Japanese News Agency—reported in Tokyo from Nanking that street fighting was resumed at dawn Saturday and the Japanese had mounted machine guns on the walls to sweep all open spaces.)

Japanese also officially announced the capture of Chinkiang, 40 miles east of Nanking, and of Taiping, midway between Nanking and Wuhu, which lies 50 miles southwest of the capital. Capture of Taiping cut off Chinese retreat from Nanking up the Yangtze River along the south bank.

Severe fighting was reported progressing in the suburbs and streets of Wuhu.

In the attack on Nanking, Japanese said they launched artillery and tank assaults against Chinghuamen, southern gate which leads to the heart of the city, and Chungshan gate, in the eastern wall. A column of Japanese pressed also against Taiping gate, in the northeast.

These drives followed the success Friday of Japanese infantrymen of the ninth division in gaining a foothold inside the city's walls. The Rising Sun banner fluttered above the principal southeastern gate of the city.

Japanese also announced capture of Purple Mountain, rising east of Nanking and commanding all land and river approaches on that side.

U. S. Marines Recalled.

(In Washington, the Navy Department revealed the Sixth Marine brigade which was dispatched from San Diego to Shanghai last summer to guard American nationals in the war zone has been ordered withdrawn at the discretion of Admiral Harry E. Yarnell, commander of the Asiatic fleet. The Navy Department said the action was "merely the routine return of special troops" from an emergency assignment. The troops were expected to return home next month.)

Fifty or more airplanes supported the Japanese attack through the afternoon, blasting at Chinese troop concentrations inside and outside the walls and attempting to smash the huge, heavily barricaded gates.

The United States gunboat Panay, which had been lying off Hsiakwan, moved 2 miles upstream to be out of range of the battle.

(Latest reports said 14 American civilians were aboard the Panay, including four of the Embassy staff; three more were aboard a Standard Oil tanker on the river, while 16 remained inside the city.)

Railroads' Plea For Immediate Relief Rejected

Refusal Follows Roosevelt Suggestion I. C. C. Take Action at Once.

The Nation's Railroads.

The Interstate Commerce Commission denied the railroads' request for an immediate 15 per cent freight rate increase.

President Roosevelt said the I. C. C. should act promptly on the roads' request for an increase to protect their solvency and that Federal subsidization would lead to State socialism.

10 Dead as Cold Grips Buffalo; Fair in Capital

Low of 20 Degrees Forecast for D. C.; No Snow in Sight.

Washington could look forward this morning to fair, cold weather while winter laid a heavy hand on Buffalo, and nearby sections of New York State.

Buried under 30 inches of snow which has fallen in three days and whipped by a chill wind from Lake Erie, the Buffalo neighborhood struggled through the worst blizzard it has known in years. At least 10 persons were dead.

Snowdrifts in some instances reached 15 feet high and all available State highway department snow trucks were sent to Kenmore by Gov. Lehman after its mayor had asked for troops.

Throughout the Nation not less than 110 deaths have been attributed to the winter's first extremely cold weather.

Temperatures here will continue to hit the low 20's at least through tomorrow, the Weather Bureau predicted, with maximum readings about 36 in the afternoon. No snow was in sight.

The mercury dipped below freezing over all Northeastern portions of the Nation, and neared freezing in Florida and northern Texas.

The coldest recording was at Glendive, Mont., where the mercury dropped to 26 below zero.

Jobless Bricklayer With Two Small Children Needs $50 Stake Until He Finds Employment

MR. TR IS A TRANSIENT. We suppose that makes his 9-year-old son and 8-year-old daughter transients, too.

He is 40 years old and a bricklayer. He has never lived anywhere long enough to be called a resident. He was born in Kansas, married in Oklahoma and has lived in Louisiana, Tennessee and California. Mrs. TR is dead.

Mr. TR came to Washington from California in September. When he had to have aid, an attempt was made to get welfare officials of that State to take his case. But he could not be accepted. He is not a Californian.

No. 10—The TR Family

The Post today presents the tenth case among the 25 neediest families of the District's unemployed employables, for whom its Christmas fund will be collected. There is no relief fund for them. They are deserving cases, investigated by an agency of the Council of Social Agencies. Their need is measured in terms of money. Unless they are helped now, the amount they need later will be much larger.

During the war Mr. TR served in the ambulance crops of the American Army. He receives no compensation, because he is able-bodied. He can receive no direct relief, because he is considered "employable." When he asks for a job, the fact that he is well and strong has no effect. There seems to be no job. The WPA cannot register him even, for he has not been here a year.

He has no civil service status. He may get temporary employment at the postoffice during the Christmas holidays, but he has no assurance of that yet.

The welfare agency to which he applied found a room for him and the children, who are in school He has been given occasional $3 food orders. The children are well-behaved, clean and well cared for.

The family needs at least $7 a week for food, in addition to the $5 a week for rent. A sum of $50 would stake them for a month. With the friends he is making here, Mr. TR might have a job by that time. Malnutrition would be staved off for the children and the small family would feel more secure as a unit.

Contributions received for the Christmas Fund yesterday totaled $393.75. (List on page 7.) This brings the total to date to $1,388.50. Offers of part-time work, clothing, baskets and furniture also have been made.

The Post does not have a list of families who would like Christmas baskets. Clubs, employe groups and individuals desiring to donate such gifts are advised to call the Council of Social Agencies, where a Christmas Exchange is being operated.

Send your donation to The Washington Post Christmas Fund, or leave it in the box on The Post's first floor. Any amount will help, however small.

Senate Will Get Housing Draft Early in Week

Report Expected Tuesday; Bill May Collide With Lynch Measure.

By the Associated Press.

The Senate Banking Committee flashed the "go" signal yesterday for President Roosevelt's housing proposals, winding up two weeks of hearings and preparing to report the Wagner housing measure to the Senate next week for action.

Chairman Wagner (Democrat), New York, said two major revisions in the President's suggestions were likely to be made—an increase in construction cost limits and action to make tax exempt the mortgage debentures to be issued under the act.

In another housing field-slum clearance and low-cost housing, Administrator Nathan Straus of the United States Housing Authority set aside an additional $41,100,000 for projects.

Commitments $70,000,000.

The new earmarkings for ten cities brought Straus' total commitments to more than $70,000,000.

Straus announced the following earmarkings:

Birmingham, Ala., $4,500,000; Buffalo, N. Y., $4,900,000; Lowell, Mass., $2,700,000; Memphis, Tenn., $1,000,000; New Orleans, $7,200,000; Omaha, Nebr., $2,100,000; Philadelphia, $12,000,000; St. Petersburg, Fla., $900,000; Yonkers, N. Y., $2,200,000, and Youngstown, Ohio, $3,600,000.

Aides of Straus said Mayor LaGuardia of New York City, who refused to allow his housing experts to attend conferences with Straus, is scheduled to call on the Housing Administrator today.

Lynch, Housing Bills May Collide

With the committee expected to mark up the final draft of the Wagner bill Tuesday, the housing legislation moved toward Senate consideration at a pace that indicated it might collide with the anti-lynching bill, given preferred status after disposal of the farm bill.

Wagner, in control of both anti-lynching and housing, said he was giving consideration to appeals of administration leaders that he permit housing to be considered first so that it could be passed in the special session.

He predicted the committee could complete its work in one day and that the Senate would not take "more than a day and a half" to pass the bill.

Green Rejects Yearly Wage.

President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, told the committee yesterday President Roosevelt's suggestion for establishment of an annual wage for building workers, instead of higher hourly pay for irregular periods, would not be practical.

Green said the building wage scale was a "purely local problem," that a reduction in labor costs would not be reflected by much reduction in total building costs, and that an annual wage would aggravate unemployment, overturn the complex operating methods of building and "undermine" the wage structure of the entire industry.

The A. F. of L. chief agreed with Senator Barkley (Democrat), Kentucky, that conferences might be held in some communities to formulate an annual wage scale locally, but he indicated he had small hopes for success of such meetings.

Double Insurance Urged.

I. Friedlander, former president of the United States Building and Loan League, told the committee the 90 per cent mortgage insurance provided under the new housing plan is "rather a risky venture on the part of the institution making the loan, as well as the Government." He urged that building contractors, materials dealers or real estate developers be required to sign mortgages so that 25 per cent of the loan would be covered doubly.

Before the House Banking Committee, Morton Bodfish, executive vice president of the Building and Loan League, complained that the Federal Housing Administration has been "using the hidden ball trick" in giving publicity to present 5 per cent home loans, when he said the actual cost of the loans was 6.4 per cent or more.

Harry C. Bates, president of the A. F. of L. Bricklayers and Masons Union, urged the Senate committee to include in the bill a provision requiring the payment of prevailing wages on all projects where the loan has been insured by the FHA.

$17 Budget Made Wage Parley Base

Wage conference hearings on the legal wage for women employes in District hotels, restaurants and boarding houses will be based on the recently approved $17 budget for retail workers, it was agreed yesterday at the initial meeting of the Minimum Wage Board.

Employer and employe representatives of the group were requested by Mrs. William Kittle, chairman of the board, to submit their budgets at a meeting next Friday.

Certain modifications of the approved retail wage would have to be considered due to such items as "uniforms for waitresses, breakage charges, etc.," it was pointed out.

Grassy Point, N. Y., Dec. 10 (AP).—Postmaster General James A. Farley ordered today the closing of his old home town postoffice, where he collected and delivered family mail as a boy.

Postmaster Vincent Hannigan, a Farley appointee, posted a notice saying the office would end 103 years of service next Wednesday.

"I declined to continue the office," said Hannigan, "because the volume of business is too small. My pay for the past year was less than $50."

Politics and People

Importance of U. S. Railroads' Economic Plight Cannot Be Exaggerated.

By Franklyn Waltman

NOTHING now pending before the country is as important as the critical condition of the railroads, even if the Interstate Commerce Commission refuses to see anything extraordinary about their situation. This problem has an importance which cannot be exaggerated. If two or three of the major railway systems now teetering on the thin edge of bankruptcy should go over at this particular time, the psychological effect would create a state of panic.

WALTMAN.

It goes without saying, however, that the Roosevelt Administration will not let any of the large railroads go into receivership at this time. Undoubtedly, if worst comes to worst, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will resume its activities as a backstop banker for the railroads, as it did during the harrowing days of the depression. Chairman Jesse H. Jones is too smart a businessman and realist not already to be earmarking a few millions of dollars for this purpose, especially since the ICC indicated yesterday that it was in no hurry to supply the needed relief.

This is not a guess. It is an assumption based on logic and the necessities of the situation. The RFC now has more than $356,000,000 sunk in the railroads and, aside from the broad public interest involved, it is only sound business sense for the Government to do whatever is necessary to protect that investment. And the Government will. In all probability, it also will be forced to supply some of the railroads credit with which to put men back to work before it is finished.

Such action, however, solves nothing. It is a mere palliative to keep the economic structure from again falling apart in a critical period. Indeed, the more money the Government lends to railroads, the worse their situation becomes, for no matter what might be fancied about a country spending itself into prosperity, neither the railroads nor any private enterprise can do that.

Whatever sum the railroads borrow, they must pay back or break in the attempt. As President Roosevelt asserted yesterday, granting subsidies to the railroads leads straight into Government ownership of the carriers and eventually State socialism. Chairman Jones asserted the other day that "you cannot subsidize everything." Well, you can, but when you do that will be the end of a capitalistic system of free enterprise. It will be the State socialism of which the President spoke.

Without doubt the sins of the railroads are many. But the failure to solve the railroad problem rests not alone on the management of the carriers. It belongs in part to the ICC—which has messed with the problem for years without making any progress; the Roosevelt Administration, railway labor, the investors and many of the communities served by the railroads.

This, however, is no time to enumerate anyone's sins. The need of the moment is to give the railroads additional revenue to keep them out of bankruptcy. The only way this can be done is an increase in rates—as bitter as that pill is to swallow—and the only agency that can do that is the Interstate Commerce Commission. Seldom has that agency sat in a place of greater responsibility. Should it procrastinate and should the railroads come to grief, what better argument would the President wish for getting the independent, quasi-judicial agencies under his thumb, as is proposed in the pending reorganization bill?

Some people do not appear to understand the plight of the railroads. They have an idea that the carriers are seeking increased rates to swell their profits. Actually what the railroads are doing is seeking an increase to offset in part a staggering boost in the cost of operation, brought about in large part by New Deal policies.

Even if there were no industrial recession, the railroads would be in trouble. On the basis of their November business they would be justified in asking much more than a 15 per cent freight rate boost. But they filed their petition before they saw freight loadings zoom down from 4,000,000 cars in October to 2,628,000 cars last month.

The reason for that crash in their business—which everyone expects to be but temporary—is the same reason why the railroads must have increased rates and why the bus lines and trucks and everyone else must have increased rates—namely, increased costs of operation.

Since August the railroads have been forced to raise wages 5 per cent, adding $133,000,000 annually to their expenses. Unemployment compensation and railroad retirement taxes have added another $111,000,000 to their pay rolls. The cost of coal, due to an increased price, adds another $52,000,000, increased oil prices mean another additional $25,000,000, and the increased cost of other materials means $197,000,000 more.

All of this grew out of the high price, higher wages, less work philosophy of the New Deal. Had such advances been stretched over a period of a few years, increased business and increased efficiency might have opened a way to absorb them. But, laid down on the railroads virtually at one time, it left them with no alternative but to seek increased rates. Every businessman in the country has been faced with the same problem, and all of them have been raising prices—but the railroads must have Government authority to pass the increased costs along.

What has happened to the railroads could have been foreseen a year ago. For illustration, in October last year steel rails—an important item in railroad purchases—cost $36.38 a ton. In October this year the price on steel rails was $42.75 a ton. Why the increase? It resulted from a chain of circumstances going back to John L. Lewis' efforts to organize the steel industry, and to social security taxes.

Myron Taylor, of United States Steel, capitulated to Mr. Lewis and granted his demands for higher wages and shorter work weeks until the average hourly wage in blast furnaces, steel works and rolling mills last month was 85.4 cents, compared with an average hourly wage in January of 72.6 cents. Here was an average hourly increase—part of it due to the necessity of paying time and one-half for overtime beyond 40 hours a week—of 12.8 cents, or approximately 16 per cent.

But Mr. Taylor did not care. He immediately raised the price, of his steel—also about 16 per cent. So what? Why, to name but two items, the cost of small automobiles now is $100 more than a year ago, and the railroads wish to increase their rates 15 per cent, which if granted will be passed along to the consumers, making everything more costly. In the end, less commodities are sold, the railroads have less business, and the general standard of living is lowered rather than raised.

This is what happens when a government undertakes or encourages artificial wage boosts that have no relation to productive efficiency. It is a process of pulling one's self up by one's own bootstraps—it has not worked, and will not work.

Few Dollars Leased Millions In TVA's Marble, Witness Says

Sen. Berry's Partners Tell How They Purchased Rights in Norris Dam Area After Government Had Held Deposits Worthless.

By the Associated Press.

Knoxville, Tenn., Dec. 10.—George Collins, race horse owner and oil operator from Frankfort, Ky., told a three-man Federal commission today he obtained an interest in millions of dollars worth of marble in the Norris Dam area by the payment of a few dollars.

Collins, a partner of Senator George L. Berry, testified at a hearing to determine the value of leases on extensive marble deposits which the TVA has declared worthless.

Collins said he joined Berry and C. A. Harris, of Knoxville, in purchasing leases in the dam reservoir, but that he was interested solely in oil development. He obtained a half interest in the enterprise, he said, by promising payment of $1,000 to a Mr. W. H. Ford.

His actual expenditures, however, amounted to only a few dollars, he said.

Counsel for TVA pointed out that the leases did not cover oil operations.

TVA counsel contended that Berry and his associates were empowered in 1935 to collect 6¼ per cent of any claims against the authority for damages to certain tracts flooded by Norris Dam.

Alvin Ziegler, TVA attorney, produced two legal papers dated November 25, 1925, and bearing a signature he said was Berry's—which cancelled two powers of attorney for a Sharp family in Union County.

The documents set forth what purported to be a new agreement whereby the Berry interests would assume the cost of any litigation and in reutrn receive 62½ per cent of any damages collected. The original papers had provided for a 50-50 split.

Senator Berry previously had testified he knew nothing of the powers of attorney and had never had any intention of a claim against the Government when he began marble operations in the Norris reservoir.

A. N. P. A. Signs Mediation Pact With Pressmen

458 Papers Covered by Renewal of Contract Started in 1908.

By the Associated Press.

The American Newspaper Publishers Association and the International Printing Pressmen's Union signed a new five-year arbitration agreement yesterday. It is designed to prevent strikes and lockouts in newspaper pressrooms.

James G. Stahlman, publisher of the Nashville (Tenn.) Banner and president of the A. N. P. A., said the agreement "should point the way to others as the only sensible, satisfactory and fair" method for settling employer-employe disputes.

Covers 458 Newspapers.

Senator Berry (Democrat), of Tennessee, president of the pressmen's union, said the publishers and the pressmen, in renewing the arbitration agreement, reaffirm "their allegiance to peace and to the normal, orderly processes of determining economic differences through the instrumentality of sanity and goodwill."

The agreement covering 458 daily newspapers provides that the publishers and the union must submit any differences to arbitration if negotiations and mediation fail.

It first was made in 1908, a year after Berry became the union's president.

Press a Public Trust.

"If the press of America is to remain free," Stahlman said, "it must justify its right to that freedom" by a rigid adherence to its public trust through leadership, particularly in times like these . . . It is, therefore, highly fitting that the American Newspaper Publishers Association should by this example point the way to others as the only sensible, satisfactory and fair settlement of differences between employer and employe."

Sea Arbitration Opposed.

A CIO maritime union and labor's Non-Partisan League joined yesterday in opposition to proposals for Federal mediation of labor disputes in the American merchant marine.

Joseph Curran, president of the national maritime union, told the House Merchant Marine Committee the proposal to have the Railway Mediation Board handle seamen's labor troubles would amount to compulsory arbitration and was the "first step in a general drive for coercive legislation against labor."

The league, in which John L. Lewis is a moving force, announced it would throw the full strength of its national political organization against this and other recommendations of the Maritime Commission.

Senators Clark, Nye and Bone Call for Publication of 'Secret' Diplomatic Papers.

THE WAR-CRY of "secret" diplomacy rang again in the Senate late yesterday when Senators Clark, of Missouri, Nye, of North Dakota, and Bone, of Washington, called for publicity for documents relating to American entry into the World War, and other recent international affairs. Sharp criticism of the State Department for refusing to publish important papers was voiced by the trio. Bone and Clark are Democrats, Nye, a Republican.

These Senators helped conduct the munitions investigation. Many of the important papers from archives of the State Department were made available to them in confidence.

Clark said that with war clouds "hanging in both hemispheres" the American people were entitled to full knowledge of secret papers that might guide this Nation's policies, and Senator Bone said "ignorance may cost the lives of hundreds of thousands of American boys."

Nye brought up the subject because of publication in the Congressional Record, at request of Senator Lodge (Republican), Massachusetts, of a British document long held confidential by the State Department listing secret treaties between allied nations for division of territory at the end of the World War.

It was charged that the allies had agreed upon a division of spoils previous to the time the United States joined their forces against Germany, Nye said.

He said he had returned a $109.20 check delivered to him today.

HERBERT MAHLER, secretary of the Kentucky miners defense, announced eleven Congressmen had asked Gov. A. B. Chandler to pardon four union miners serving life sentences.

Mahler said the men were convicted on "murder-conspiracy charges" resulting from the "Evarts-Battle cases in 1931."

He said Representatives O'Connell (Democrat), Montana; Eckert (Democrat), Pennsylvania; Dunn (Democrat), Pennsylvania; Bernard (Farmer-Labor), Minnesota; Teigan (Farmer-Labor), Minnesota; Lemke (Republican), North Dakota; Luecke (Democrat), Michigan; Coffee (Democrat), Washington; Magnuson (Democrat), Washington; Fries (Democrat), Illinois, and Amlie (Progressive), Wisconsin), asked clemency.

SENATOR BONE, back on the Senate floor after a week in the hospital, said he would not attempt to regain his title of "fastest talker in the Senate."

Shorthand reporters said Josh Lee, youthful Oklahoma Democrat, had surpassed Bone's record this week by rattling off more than 250 words a minute.

"He's an elocutionist," Bone said. "I'm just a trial lawyer."

Bone said his stay in Naval Hospital was "just an annual checkup. I'm feeling great, although I believe I had a touch of ptomaine poisoning."

SENATOR HOLT (Democrat), West Virginia, said a childhood incident of 20 years ago led him to oppose the appointment of Roy Yoke as collector of internal revenue for West Virginia.

His opposition was based solely on "personal dislike," Holt said, explaining:

"When I was just a youngster about 13 years old, he stood in a school auditorium and said my father 'ought to be stood up against a wall and shot.' I couldn't answer him, but I could never forget it."

Holt said the incident occurred during the World War. He added a Senate sub-committee to which the appointment was referred may hold a hearing on it.

Merriam Announces He'll Quit As Carnegie Institution Head

The resignation of John C. Merriam as president of the Carnegie Institution, to take effect January 1, 1939, was announced yesterday after the annual meeting of the board of trustees. Merriam has directed the institution's affairs since 1921.

The board voted unanimously to name Merriam president emeritus from the date of his resignation "with a grant sufficient to assure effective continuance of his research work under auspices of the institution." He will devote his time to researches in paleontology.

Col. Charles A. Lindbergh and Gen. John J. Pershing were among the 17 trustees who attended.

Filling the vacancies left by the death of Andrew W. Mellon and Elihu Root, sr., the board announced election to its membership of Elihu Root, jr., New York lawyer, and Henry Richard Shipley, Brookline, Mass., architect.

At the conclusion of the business session and luncheon, the trustees inspected an exhibit depicting research work carried on with Carnegie grants during the past year. The exhibit will be open to the public from 2 to 5 p. m. and from 7:30 to 10:30 p. m. today, tomorrow and Monday.

Characterizing the discovery as "one of the most important in many decades," Merriam reported that Dr. G. H. R. von Koenigswald, Dutch scientist, of Bandoeng, Java, and a research associate of the institution, had unearthed a skull, lower jaw and several teeth which fill out a new "missing link" between man and the higher apes.

Merriam said the creature, part ape and part man, lived long before the original pithecanthropus erectus, whose age had been fixed at about half a million years on the basis of previous findings.

Discovery of the specimen, according to Merriam, proves that the pithecanthropus man had progressed above the mental and physical level of the great apes, and also that man has been walking upright and using his hands and brains for 1,000,000 years.

3 Surrender As FrenchHunt Murder Band

50,000 Search for 'Death for Money' Syndicate in De Koven Slaying.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, Dec. 10.—Two men and a woman, sought throughout France by police as members of a kidnap-murder syndicate, gave themselves up tonight declaring they would establish their innocence in the slaying of five persons, including the pretty young American dancer, Jean De Koven.

Police said the three surrendered at Versailles, while 50,000 gendarmes, mobile guards and armed police sought them throughout the country.

Roger "Scarface" Million, considered by police as head of the group, and his lieutenant, Jean "The Little One" Leblanc, were the first to give themselves up. Shortly afterward the woman, known to police as Colette Trico, Million's mistress, surrendered.

Says He Threatened Death.

The woman, searched for as the mystery "blonde" of the group implicated by Eugene Weidmann in his confession of the five slayings, threw a bombshell into the investigation when she appeared with jet black hair. Police said she proved she "never had blonde hair."

Colette told police Weidmann had threatened her with death when she learned some of his friends had disappeared.

Police said, however, the black-haired woman still was presumed to be a member of the band although they had started a new search for a "blond."

"I never lived at Weidmann's villa," the 25-year-old woman said, "but I visited there often during the summer.

"At first I never had anything to reproach Weidmann with. He never mentioned his crimes. When I learned from newspapers of the deaths of some persons I had known he was friendly with he threatened to kill me."

"Murder for Money" Is Theory.

Police had sought the three on the theory a "murder for money" gang had been responsible for the five killings and perhaps more.

Throughout the day police agents dug up the grounds of the isolated "death villa" at St. Cloud, where Weidmann, confessed "expert in murder," led them to the buried body of the long missing Brooklyn, N. Y., dancer he said he had strangled to get "money to eat."

Discovery of a trunk in the villa, where Weidmann was captured after a gun fight yesterday, caused police to declare Miss De Koven might not have been the only woman murdered. Police Magistrate Georges Berry of Versailles said "enough clothes for seven or eight women" were found in the trunk.

Clothes Bear Girls' Names.

The garments were marked with different initials, mostly "C." "J" and "I." Handkerchiefs were embroidered "Sophie" and "Jeannine."

Police said Million would be questioned about two other unsolved cases, the slaying of a Russian taxi driver named Markoff and the kidnaping of an unidentified girl from a beach last summer.

Little by little the Versailles police wormed details of Miss De Koven's death from Weidmann, curly-haired German former convict. They quoted him as saying:

"I took De Koven from Paris to my villa by train. From the station we took a short walk. We bought a bottle of milk and drank it between us. I killed her that evening. I did not tell the others in my gang that she was dead. I said only I had kidnaped her and she was at the house of one of my friends."

Met Victims Through Ads.

Weidman's confession put police on the trail of others who might belong to his gang.

Berry said they met their victims through advertisements inserted in Paris magazines. One read, "Interesting prospect for wealthy man wanting to invest money." Another, "Young man would like to meet woman with ready cash."

Miss De Koven, Weidmann said, was the first victim and was slain July 23. The widespread search for the girl was fruitless until Weidmann suddenly and voluntarily confessed her slaying after telling of the four men he had shot in the back of the head.

One was Fritz Frommer, a member of the gang and once Weidmann's cellmate in a German prison. The others were Jean Couffy, a taxi driver; Roger LeBlond, a broker, and Raymond LeSobre, a real estate agent.

Edward's Duchess Trails All Others In Burke Peerage

London, Dec. 10 (AP).—The Duchess of Windsor has been placed last of all Britain's duchesses, the current edition of Burke's Peerage disclosed today.

Letters patent issued by the college of arms did not follow custom and raise the former Wallis Warfield to the same rank as her husband, listed as the number four man of the realm.

The ranking made Edward the third duke, below his brother-king and two other brothers—Gloucester and Kent—while his wife was listed as the twenty-ninth duchess.

Plot to Murder Delbos Found In Code Note

Letter to Jailed Hungarian Terrorist Intercepted at Valenciennes.

By the Associated Press.

Valenciennes, France, Dec. 10.—A plot to assassinate French Foreign Minister Yvon Delbos was discovered here today by police who seized a coded letter giving details of the plan.

The letter, police said, was addressed to a Hungarian terrorist now in jail here.

He is Koloman Budai, arrested here November 8 charged with firing shots through the windows of the League of Nations Building at Geneva in 1905.

The letter revealed, police said, that Budai had given information to a band of terrorists to facilitate an attempt on Delbos' life while he was at Praha on his present swing through Central and Eastern Europe.

The letter was addressed in care of general delivery, and its contents were deciphered by police here who relayed information to Czechoslovakian police. An arrest was made in Praha Wednesday, police said.

Another letter, addressed by Budai to Antwerp, was handed over by Belgian police, police said. They added that it disclosed an attempt against the governor general of Algeria, Lebau.

Scottish Express Hits Other Train; 26 Bodies Found

Castlecary, Scotland, Dec. 10 (AP).—A fast Scottish express smashed into the rear of another train between Glasgow and Edinburgh tonight killing an undetermined number of persons, believed to be between 30 and 40.

Twenty-six bodies had been removed from the wreckage late tonight, and a rescue crew member said:

"There are more bodies inside—women, I think."

The disaster was the greatest reported in storms which swept the British Isles and Continental Europe. A 24-hour snowstorm paralyzed land, sea and air travel over the entire north German plain. Gales held the north of England and Scotland frozen tight. Blizzards crippled transport in Belgium. Melting snow and ice sent floodwaters surging over sections of Bulgaria and Yugoslavia.

House Quells Revolt, Passes Crop Curb Bill

Permanent Control of Production Quotas Voted, 268 to 129.

another amendment, removing restrictions on the Secretary of Agriculture in the making of commodity loans, nearly cost passage of the entire bill. The Jones amendment eliminated language inserted by Representative Scott W. Lucas (Democrat), of Illinois, providing mandatory corn loans. It was this deletion that aligned corn-belt members in a bloc behind the motion to recommit.

Merit System Plan Fails.

Before the House started the roll call parade to final passage, the civil service met another setback. Representative Robert Luce (Republican), of Massachusetts, moved to apply the civil service system to farm program employes. His amendment was defeated 77 to 34.

Passage of the bill was the first break in the legislative deadlock which has persisted since the special session was convened November 15. With less than two weeks of the session left, the Senate still was in a welter of controversy on their more compulsory farm bill. The Senate, which made minor modifying changes in its bill yesterday, will meet again today on the measure. No final Senate vote was anticipated before the middle of next week.

The Senate bill would invoke more frequent use of compulsory marketing quotas than Secretary of Agriculture Wallace would like, with penalties much sharper than the House imposes. It provides for "parity" price payments to co-operating farmers, but this is conditioned on money available, which would be distributed on a pro rata basis.

Measure's Provisions.

As finally approved, the House bill strengthens the existing soil-conservation program and provides for continuation of farm-benefit payments and a permanent commodity-loaning system.

Limited soil conservation control machinery would be supplemented by a compulsory marketing quota system, enforced by penalties, when oversupply threatened.

The new soil conservation benefit payments would be measured by each farmer's share of the normal national production of any of the five major commodities.

The Secretary of Agriculture could enter into contracts with farmers. This he could not do under the soil-conservation act. As a further step, individual production allotments would be determined annually on the basis of average acreage during the previous ten years, in the case of corn or wheat.

These allotments would not be compulsory, but would supply a yardstick through which the farmer could measure what his output should be if he is to co-operate in holding the crop at a point where it would produce parity income.

Could Obtain Compliance.

But through benefit payments to farmers co-operating (the so-called bait method), the Secretary of Agriculture could obtain measured compliance with soil program allotments of production on corn, wheat or the other commodities.

These provisions may restore in effect the old AAA control method, and the Secretary is expected to put into effect a soil conservation program along the lines of the old AAA adjustment policies.

This non-compulsory method of control would be invoked immediately, and if it failed to hold down crops, the compulsory quota system would be used as a last resort.

The catch in the benefit-payment method is that the Secretary does not have the large sums of money he once wielded to buy compliance. Observers do not regard the $665,000,000 available for benefit payments, from appropriations and customs receipts as sufficient to purchase production control.

Lending Program Provided.

Supplementing this, under the bill, would be the lending program or the ever-normal granary features. The Commodity Credit Corporation is authorized to make loans on farm commodities, including dairy products, and crops against which loans were made would be stored in reserve.

But efforts to make the loans mandatory failed, and the bill gives the CCC full discretion on when to make the loans, how they are to be made and at what price.

With these two devices—voluntary contracts and allotments for farmers, and the ever-normal granary through commodity loans, the Secretary first would attempt to prevent a glut on the market. But if they fail, the compulsory marketing quota system on all major commodities is provided in the bill.

The quota systems are all systems. For the corn crop, for example, the Secretary each year would define the commercial corn-producing area, and before planting time he would determine the basic average acreage to be planted in these areas to reach the "reserve supply level," equal to a normal year's domestic consumption and exports, plus 15 per cent. This acreage would be allotted to various counties, and then apportioned through local committees to the farms.

Whenever this "reserve supply level" is likely to be exceeded (at a point around 2,900,000,000 bushels of corn), marketing quotas would be declared in effect. Within 20 days after the announcement of quotas, the Secretary is required to conduct a referendum among all farmers in the commercial corn area.

If more than one-third of the farmers opposed the quotas, they would not go into effect. If more than two-thirds approved, then corn farmers would be subjected to a penalty of 15 cents a bushel for all corn marketed in excess of quotas. (The penalty on cotton is 2 cents a pound, and on wheat, 15 cents a bushel.)

Individual farmers may appeal from their quotas, which apply to all farmers, whether or not they cooperated in the conservation-adjustment program. The Government may take legal steps to collect penalties.

The Secretary may terminate quotas when he foresees that supplies will be normal.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Interior Department Recreation Association presents the Federal Trio (Reginald Kassebaum, violin; Leslie Atkins, violoncello; Ervine Stenson, piano), assisted by Hirsh Pearlman, viola, and James Magill, barytone, in the Department Auditorium. Program: Trio in B flat major, Op. 11 (Beethoven), Adagio and Rondo (Schubert), Valse-Scherzo (Straus), Cornish Boat Song and English Country Dance (Cyril Scott), Bolero (Arbos), Songs by Handel, Lully, Kountz, Speaks and Malotte.

A larger audience should have heard the enjoyable program presented last night by the Federal Trio and assisting artists at the second concert in the monthly series started recently by the Interior Department Recreation Association. Good news sometimes travels slowly, but it ought not to take long for the public to realize that good music is being offered without recompense by musicians whose ocupation is in the Federal service and whose avocation is music.

The major work on the program was the B flat major trio which Beethoven originally wrote for piano, clarinet and violoncello, although it has been included for many years in the series of trios for piano and strings. Tradition claims that it was composed at the request of a clarinet player, and it may be for that reason that it is more formal than inspired. It is, however, pleasant music, even though the essential Beethoven speaks only in the adagio movement.

When he wrote this trio, Beethoven was only 27 and still under the influence of Haydn. Over the adagio, which is a version of the theme used in the minuet of the piano sonata in G major and in the septet for strings and woodwind, he worked the most successfully and spoke most individually. In the final movement he devised lively variations on a theme by Weigl, and he was always happy in the fantasy of embroidering melodies.

Hirsh Pearlman joined the Federal Trio in a good reading of an adagio and rondo by Schubert. The final group by the trio brought forward compositions fresh and unhackneyed: a piquant valsecherzo by Oskar Straus, two beautifully harmonized pieces by Cyril Scott in his most mystic vein, and a lively bolero by Fernandez Arbos.

James Magill, who was heard in two elderly operatic arias—Handel's "Ombra mai fu" and Lully's "Bois Epais"—and a group of lyrics by Kountz.

Capt. E. J. Dorn, Ex-Governor of Samoa, Is Dead

Capt. Edward J. Dohn, U. S. N., retired, and former naval governor of Samoa and Guam, died yesterday at the Naval Hospital at the age of 83.

Capt. Dorn, who lived at the Highland Apartments, Connecticut avenue and California street northwest, had been a resident of Washington since 1880. He was retired in 1905, but was called back into service during the World War as head of the Navy Relief Society.

Born at Potosi, Wisc., son of a surgeon with the Union Army, Capt. Dorn was educated at St. Louis (Mo.) high schools and entered the Naval Academy with the class of 1874. In 1880 he married Elizabeth Syble Halpine and came to Washington to take a post at the hydrographic office.

In 1902, after serving in many positions ashore and afloat, Capt. Dorn was appointed naval governor of Samoa, in the South Seas. His record there attracted the attention of President Theodore Roosevelt, and in 1907 he was made naval governor of Guam. At the expiration of his term, the natives petitioned for his reappointment, and he remained there until 19110.

Capt. and Mrs. Dorn celebrated their fifty-seventh wedding anniversary last July. She survives. He also leaves two sisters, Miss Olga Dorn and Miss Clara Dorn, of Los Angeles.

Funeral services will be held at St. Margaret's Episcopal Church at 2 p. m. Monday. Burial will be in Arlington Cemetery.

8 D. C. Firms Join to Attack Privilege Tax

Concerns Claim Violation of 2 Constitutional Guarantees.

Citing two constitutional guarantees that were violated in passage of the District's new business privilege tax, eight Washington concerns yesterday asked District Court to enjoin the District Commissioners from attemtping to collect the tax from them.

The firms, in their suit, alleged the tax was discriminatory, in that it did not apply proportionately to all businesses, and also violated the clause of the Constitution which prohibits the taking of property without due process of law.

The firms that joined in the assault were Fisher-Brown, Inc., 1268 Fifth street northeast, wholesale meats; The Square Deal Market Co., Inc., of 1420 Seventh street northwest, operator of a chain of seven grocery stores; Brewer-Snyder Co., Inc., 1229 D street southeast, manufacturer of food products; George D. Deoudes Co., Inc., 1292 Fifth street northeast, wholesale produce; A. D. Loffler, jjr., Inc., 1262 Fifth street northeast, wholesale meats; Harry H. Conrad Co., Inc., 1430 Irving street northwest, plumbing contractor; Joseph P. Gamble, 1266 Fifth street northeast, hotel supplies, and L. S. Briggs, Inc., 435 Eleventh street southwest, meat products.

Acting through the law firm of Welch, Daily & Welch and Maurice Lanham, jr., the eight contended they would be required under the tax act to pa-- a $10 flat fee and two-fifth of 1 per cetn of their 1936 gross business, while others not in business prior to August 17, effective date of the act, are not required to make any payment. This they pictured as making the act discriminatory and therefore unlawful.

The suit is the fourth to challenge the legality of the act. The others chiefly relied upon contentions the act was invalid because it constituted a burden on interstate commerce.

Ford Strike Called; 49 Pickets Seized

Kansas City, Dec. 10 (AP).—The United Automobile Workers of America called a strike today at Kansas City's Ford assembly plant, where company officials protested recently there was inadequate police protection, and 150 police promptly arrested all 49 men who attempted picketing.

The U. A. W. A. local, an affiliate of the Committee for Industrial Organization, said the strike call was too late to affect today the 300 men it claims among the 1,100 at work, but that they would not report back Monday. The union charged discrimination in calling men back to work after a seasonal layoff.

Vivid Red Sash TiesX Plain Back

Inspired by the pirate sashes Fredric March wears in Cecil B. DeMille's production, "The Buccaneer," women are now tying brilliant satin sashes about their waistlines for morning, afternoon and evening. Franciska Gaal, new foreign star opposite Mr. March in this film, advocates bright red sashes of silk jersey with long, slinky fringed ends, against stark black. These pirate sashes are favored in Hollywood because they "do" so much for even the most graceful figure.

Cromwell Asks U. S. to Service Industry Loans

James H. R. Cromwell, economic student and husband of Doris Duke, tobacco heiress, came to Washington yesterday to expound his Government subsidy plan "sixteen times more efficient than public works spending" for bringing back prosperity, to two Congressional groups and the press.

He also told the press that his wife is considering numerous ways of using her millions for the public benefit.

Before a closed meeting of the Senate Agriculture Committee in the morning, the press in the afternoon, and an unofficial steering committee of 160 Representatives at night he explained his plan of "negative interest."

Under this plan the government will give "between two and three hundred million dollars a year" to commercial banks for interest which industrial borrowers cannot pay on their loans. Encouragement of at least partial payment of interest would encourage business to borrow money, and thereby create jobs and more business activity, he believes.

"This is the cheapest way the government can get money into industry," he said.

He did not make a guess on how many new jobs or how much increased business activity would result from his plan.

Concerning his wife, he said she was shocked by conditions she saw on her recent tour of Arthurdale, W. Va., resettlement project, with Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt.

"She is considering a very great many different ways of using her money. I would not say that housing was one of them."

He also added that his wife was fatigued from following the untiring Mrs. Roosevelt about.

Chapter One—Success Story . . .

BEGINS . . . in the careers of many business and professional leaders, with the newspaper route. And we believe every one of these men would state emphatically that serving a newspaper route was an invaluable experience—one that taught them to give service, be business-like, practice thrift, and be courteous, reliable and ambitious.

Today, our extensive, modern training and welfare program for carrier-boys does much more! It sets them up in business for themselves, provides able supervisors, arranges helpful meetings and enjoyable recreation—takes a keen interest in seeing every carrier build up a good route, and develop into an intelligent, useful young citizen.

How about your own 'teen-age son? No matter what life-work he plans to undertake, he is far more likely to succeed if he supplements his school studies with practical business experience by handling one of our home-delivery routes.

Green Attacks Bill to Create U. S. Labor Czar

'More Dangerous' Than 5-Man Board, He Says in Letter to Congress.

The power which might be given a Department of Labor administrator to administer wages-hours legislation is "even more dangerous" than the five-man board originally provided in the Black-Connery bill, President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, said last night in a letter to all members of Congress.

Green had objected to the provision for a board, preferring statutes which fixed wages and hour, with vested enforcement by the Department of Justice. He cited the A. F. of L.'s experiences with the National Labor Relations Board as basis for his objection.

His attack on the bill, revised Thursday by the House Labor Committee preparatory to House consideration Monday, was regarded as an argument for recommittal and as foreshadowing possible attempts to send the measure back to committed when it is taken up.

During the day an important Committee for Industrial Organizaton union carried the C. I. O.-A. F. of L. feud to Congress again.

Homer Martin, president of the United Automobile Workers of America, a C I. O. affiliate, warned House members who oppose the measure they "will not be forgotten at next year's elections."

The amended bill, Green charged, would set up a labor czar, with "life and death powers over industrial organizations, communities, labor unions and collective bargaining agencies." He contended that "if a board such as was proposed in the original bill was dangerous and unacceptable, certainly the administrator is even more dangerous, and should be rejected."

In a nine page analysis of the bill, Green enumerated 30 sweeping powers over industry and labor vested in the proposed administrator. He said:

"All the objections which exist against the administration of the act by a board and all of the dangers inherent therein exist in aggravated form under the set-up of the administrator; this for the reason that in the case of the board there are five minds functioning of persons selected from different localities, and with a representative of labor thereon. The principle of checks and balances, therefore, may apply in the case of the board but not in the case of one administrator."

The only apparent difference in the two plans, Green pointed out, is: the board could issue an order embodying conclusions different from the recommendations of the local committee (set up to determine sectional variations in standards) but the administrator could only reject recommendations with which he disagreed and refer the matter back to the same or a new local committee for reconsideration. Otherwise, the powers first sought to be vested in a board, and now in a single administrator, are identical.

Randolph Howard Expires in Fairfax

Allan Randolph Howard, 71, retired Virginia business man and banker and descendant of a family famous in Revolutionary days, died yesterday at his home at Freedom Hill, near Tysons Crossroad, Fairfax County.

Born at Altona, in Spotsylvania County, Mr. Howard spent the early part of his life at his parents' estate, Kenmore, at Fredericksburg. Va. Kenmore, now a national shrine, was once the home of Betty Washington, sister of George Washington. One of Mr. Howard's famous ancestors was Col. John Eager Howard, of Baltimore, who was decorated for bravery after the Battle of Cowpens.

Mr. Howard was educated at the old Hanover Academy at Norwood, Va., and then entered the banking business in Fredericksburg. He was afterward associated with the Ford Motor Co. in Washington and Alexandria, retiring about five years ago.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Margaret Lamar Howard a daughter, Mrs. Robert G. Robb, of Williamsburg, Va., and a son, William Key Howard, of Bell Hill, Caroline County, Va.

Funeral services will be held at his home at 10 a. m. tomorrow. Burial will be tomorrow afternoon at Richmond.

'Pat' Ryan Off to N. Y. To Visit His Family

Hickory, N. C., Dec. 10 (AP).—With a minimum of leave-taking, Basil ("Pat") Ryan, member of a wealthy New York family, left last night for New York, presumably for a Christmas holiday visit with members of his family. He was dismissed yesterday from a hospital, where he had been treated three times since his marriage November 4 to Miss Martha Barkley, of Morganton, mother of a three-month-old son.

Accord Found With President On Profits Tax

Treasury and House Men, Roosevelt Agree Upon Changes Next Session.

far on what we are trying to accomplish."

Then Chairman Doughton took the air last night to say in a radio address that "some mistakes have been made" in past tax legislation, but "we are making every effort to correct them by utilizing the facts and experience gained in administering the law."

Besides Doughton and Vinson, attending the White House conference with the President were Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau and Undersecretary of the Treasury Roswell Magill, the Administration's ace tax man.

While reiterating that special session tax relief was impossible of attainment, Doughton told reporters that "before we leave here we ought to know and ought to let the country know what we are going to do."

Vinson added that "as soon as the drafting counsel lets us know that their end is clear, we probably will make public a recapitulation of our tax conclusions." He said "knotty" questions have arisen in drafting the changes.

Neither Doughton nor Vinson would say the changes already tentatively voted in the undivided profits tax and the capital gains levy would remained unaltered. On the contrary, Doughton said "some adjustments" may be made.

"They will be somewhat within the range of what we have done, and we will announce the changes when we make them," said Doughton.

Changes in Program Proposed.

The sub-committee already has voted to exempt companies earning up to $25,000 from the undivided profits tax, and substitute graduated income rates of from 12½ to 14 per cent. The undivided profits tax principle would be retained on companies earning more than $25,000, under a scale ranging from 16 to 20 per cent. The capital gains levy has been tentatively changed to encourage freer sale of assets and movement of capital.

It was learned that possible changes in this proposal were suggested at yesterday's conference, but Doughton said the views of all present were "running somewhat parallel." He said the President indicated "confidence that our committee can go ahead and write a good tax bill."

Seek to Avoid Inequities.

In his statement to reporters, and again in his radio speech last night, Doughton emphasized the need of at least replacing the revenue lost by changes, and "possibly picking up a little more." He said no substantial reduction in the total general tax burden can be expected.

"Persons clamoring for instant repeal of the undistributed profits tax apparently are taking no thought of the necessity for a tax to take its place," said Doughton in his radio speech.

"To repeal any law is but the work of a day. However, to thoroughly work out and fully consider a fair and workable substitute measure requires time and thought, and too great haste at this crucial time might result in inequities equal to, or greater than, those we are now striving to correct."

He said the sub-committee is directing its efforts toward two main objectives, and "pledged" himself to do his best to achieve both within revenue limits.

"The first of these," he said, "is the elimination of as many of the defects and hardships in unusual cases as we may be able to remove; and the second is the correction, to as great an extent as possible, of the harmful effects that may be caused by existing taxes on our general business conditions."

Virginia Beauty Given 25 Years In Mate's Death

By the Associated Press.

Stuart, Va., Dec. 10.—Without visible sign of emotion, Mrs. Bertha Recs late today heard a jury in Patrick County Circuit Court sentence her to serve 25 years in prison for what the State charged was her part in the murder of her husband, Elmore Recs, early in October.

The jury found the 39-year-old mountain woman, who has a reputation as a local beauty, guilty of first degree murder.

Commonwealth's Attorney Frank P. Burton, held that Mrs. Recs plotted with Elmore Marby, 20-year-old farmer, to murder her Hungarian-born husband.

Marby testified he killed Recs with a shotgun at the solicitation of Mrs. Recs. He said the woman had promised to marry him, and to see that he "didn't go to jail."

Marby, scheduled to go to trial as soon as the trial of Mrs. Recs was completed, today waived the right to a hearing before a jury, and submitted his case to Judge Clement. The court deferred decision.

John Robert Jones, 84, retired lumberjack and a resident of Washington for 18 years, died yesterday at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Elizabeth Lombardi, 3323 Eleventh street northwest.

Born in Anne Arundel County (Md.), Mr. Jones spent most of his life at Maryland lumber camps. Besides his daughter, he leaves a son, James J. Jones, also of Washington.

Funeral services will be held Monday morning at Sacred Heart Catholic Church. Burial will be in Mount Olivet Cemetery.

Colored Students Barred.

Jefferson City, Mo., Dec. 10 (AP).—Colored persons were denied entrance to the University of Missouri under a State Supreme Court ruling today. The court refused to issue a mandamus requested by Lloyd Gaines, 25, of St. Louis, to force university officials to admit him to the law school.

Immediate Rail Rate Increase Denied Despite Roosevelt Plea

I.C.C. Claims Action Taken Before President Remarked it Should Act Promptly to Save Roads; Hearings May Be Expedited.

thority be given to them to make immediately effective their requested 15 per cent increase in freight rates and a boost of one-half cent in Eastern passenger coach rates pending determination of the proposed permanent increase now being heard.

The commission gave no reasons for dismissing the unprecedented motion for authority to make the rates immediately effective. Informally, it was said at the commission's offices that the action should not be taken as a rebuff to the President, as the commission had reached a decision before hearing of Mr. Roosevelt's remarks in his press conference.

Case Not Hopeless.

Moreover, it was contended that the commission's action should not be taken as any indication the ICC after full hearing of the case may not grant the railroads increased rates. But, it was said, the commission did not believe it should authorize rate increases after hearing only one side of the case.

The railroads moved for immediate application of the rates because of the fact that hearings of the commission, as now scheduled, will not be concluded until February, with March 1 as the earliest possible date on which a decision might be rendered. This would mean that the railroads could not make the increased rates effective until April 1.

The railroads contended that due to an extraordinary decline in business in November, many of the carriers could not wait until April for relief and that if sharply curtailed service and bankruptcies were to be averted they would have to have increased revenue by January 1 or shortly thereafter.

May Expedite Hearings.

It is now expected that the I. C. C. may further expedite its hearings on the railroad's original proposal so that a decision may be reached in advance of March. It also is possible that if the commission decides to authorize rate increases it may set aside its rules to permit the new charges to be placed in effect on five days' notice to shippers, instead of the 30 days' notice now required.

President Roosevelt, at his press conference, did not hesitate to demonstrate the grave concern which he feels over the critical railroad situation, as reported yesterday in The Post. Mr. Roosevelt asserted that the quicker a final decision was reached on the railroads rate increase petition the better it would be all around. This was during the morning, while the I. C. C. action on the motion for immediate rate increases did not come until 2 p. m.

The President said he wished to avoid government ownership of the railroads but that he did not believe railroad receiverships could continue without the Federal government taking some kind of action. Asked whether a subsidy to the railroads might be granted should the increased rates be refused, the President asserted that was a direct road to State socialism—that once a subsidy to cover operating costs were given to the railroads similar government aid would have to be given to oil and other hard-pressed industries.

No Plan for Rails.

Mr. Roosevelt explained that the Administration had fromulated no plan to help the railroads because the I. C. C. was the only Federal agency which had power to supply the needed relief. The President said he had discussed the entire situation with Chairman Jesse H. Jones of the RFC and that beyond small loans to two small carriers there appeared no immediate need for financial help.

He indicated he had no plans for reestablishment of a federal railroad co-ordinator. Mr. Roosevelt said he believed the railroad situation was the most important which faced the Nation and that it was no nearer permanent solution than in 1934. As problems facing the railroads he enumerated the necessity for readjustment of over-capitalization; the need for abandoning trackage in areas where a duplication of service now exists and another effort toward railroad consolidation in the interests of economy and efficiency.

Mr. Roosevelt, citing an illustration, said that a railroad capitalized at $200,000,000 and able to earn a return only on $100,000,000 of capital could not go on. Something would have to be done to correct that maladjustment, he said. Asked what could be done, Mr. Roosevelt replied that it was not possible to get blood out of a stone. He conceded that much of the difficulty in eliminating duplication of services arose from shippers who believed they would be better served by two competing carriers than one.

Meanwhile, the I. C. C. continued its hearing on the railroads' original proposal for a permanent 15 per cent freight rate increase and a boost of from 2 to 2½ cents a mile in the Eastern passenger coach fare. Spokesmen for shippers appearing before the commission were generally favorable to the rate increase. Indeed, only the anthracite coal producers so far have opposed the rate.

A significant piece of testimony was given by E. P. Palmer, vice president of the Associated General Contractors of America, because of the contention that any increased freight rate on building material would retard the President's housing program.

Palmer contended the proposed freight rate increase would boost the cost of finished structure only 86/100 of 1 per cent, adding that "a house which would cost $5,000 under existing freight rates will cost only $43 more if this increase be granted." He conceded that variations of this figure would exist for particular structures and in particular districts.

Negligible Increase in Cost.

"It is believed," he said, "that an increase so small is negligible when compared with other conditions affecting construction, and it will have little or no effect upon the volume of construction. Before reaching this conclusion, studies were made to determine whether the increased freight rates put into effect in the second quarter of 1935 and terminated in the fourth quarter of 1936 produced any effect. We did not find that these changes in freight rates had any influence on construction volume."

He said the contractors were not present as "a seller testifying for a buyer" because railroad work, important though it is, constitutes but 7 per cent of all construction, and that the contractors would not advocate a proposal beneficial to 7 per cent of their customers if it were detrimental to the interests of the remaining 93 per cent.

C. E. Widdell, traffic manager of the Tenneasee Products Corporation, of Nashville, Tenn., also appeared in support of the increased rates. He said his company paid the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railroad about $12,000,000 annually in freight revenue, or about 4 per cent of that road's gross revenues.

"If conditions don't improve," Widdell asserted, "it may be necessary to give the railroads twice as much as a 15 per cent increase. Public interest is against any collapse of the country's transportation system."

He pointed out that railroad buying power was an important element in the economic structure, asserting that "the railroads provide a back-log of about 20 per cent in the basic buying power of the Nation." His own company sold little directly to railroads, he said, but sold to steel and chemical companies, which in turn sold heavily to the railroads. He pointed out that with the collapse of railroad buying the country's steel production fell from 85 to 30 per cent of capacity in a period of from 60 to 90 days.

John M. Morris, director of the industrial division of the Birmingham Chamber of Commerce, presented a resolution of the board of directors of that organization indorsing the railroads' petition. Although his organization's membership consists chiefly of shippers and receivers who pay freight rates, Morris explained the action was taken because of the importance of railroad purchases to the Birmingham district.

C. & O. Wins Direct Control Of 2 Railroads

Conditional Permission Is Given to Obtain Nickel Plate and Erie Lines.

By the Associated Press.

The Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Co. received conditional permission from the Interstate Commerce Commission yesterday to obtain direct control of the New York, Chicago & St. Louis (Nickel Plate) Railroad and the Erie Railroad through purchase of capital stock from two subsidiary holding companies.

The authority was granted upon the condition that the C. & O. abide by any future decision of the commission with respect to the acquisition by it of the properties of the Chicago, Springfield & St. Louis Railway Co., and of the Middletown & Unionville Railroad Co.—contiguous short lines and interveners in the current proceedings.

The carrier already has indirect control of the Nickel Plate and Erie through its ownership of two holding companies—the Virginia Transporation Corporation and the Alleghany Corporation—which, together, hold 57.02 per cent of Nickel Plate and 55.68 per cent of Erie.

The Virginia Corporation owns 7.44 per cent of the capital stock of Nickel Plate and 45.68 per cent of Erie. The C. & O. holds an option from the Alleghany Corporation which entitles it to acquire the latter's holdings representing 49.58 per cent of Nickel Plate and 10 per cent of Erie.

The C. & O. was authorized to take over from the Virginia Corp. 25,100 shares of Nickel Plate, common, 151,405 shares of Erie first preferred, 60,195 shares of Erie second preferred and 769,800 shares of Erie common; and, from the Alleghany Corp., 167,300 shares of Nickel Plate, common, and 215,000 shares of Erie common.

The C. & O. proposes to pay the Alleghany Corp. $5,065,475, or $13.25 a share for the stock of both carriers, of which amount all but $550,000 already has been paid. In return for the stock held by the Virginia Corp. the C. & O. would surrender for cancellation its stock in the holding company in the par amount of $44,068,430.

Commissioner Charles D. Mahaffie, concurring in part with the commission decision, criticized the indirect way in which acquisition of the properties had been effected.

Virginia Steamer Engine Explodes, Killing 2 Hands

Reedville, Va., Dec. 10 (AP).—Two men were killed today when a gasket in the engine room of the steamer W. L. Messick blew out while the vessel was being overhauled at the wharf of the Edwards Co.'s menhaden fishing plant.

W. A. Edwards, president of the company, said Andrew Mozingo, 18, was scalded to death, and Harry Jones, 50, apparently was suffocated.

A third man, Dave Reamy, about 40, was rescued through a 24-inch manhole by fellow workers who dropped a rope to him in the steam-filled room. Reamy was badly scalded.

Blaze Ties Up Heavy Traffic Half an Hour

Second Apartment House Fire in Day Brings Two Alarms.

Fire attributed to electrical wiring early last night called apparatus on two alarms to an apartment house at 1803 Phelps street northwest and tied up homegoing traffic on Connecticut avenue for a half-hour. Firemen said damage was confined to the basement.

The first alarm was turned in at 5:30 o'clock by a resident of a house next door who saw smoke pouring from the apartment building. A half-hour later the flames were under control.

Earlier in the day a stubborn blaze beneath the roof of a two-story apartment house at 950 Longfellow street northwest drove five families to the street and defied firemen for nearly an hour.

Three alarms were sounded before firefighters finally brought the flames under control. Starting in an air chamber—apparently from defective wiring—the blaze gained rapid headway before it was discovered by a passerby.

Billows of smoke above the building brought more than 500 spectators to the scene. Traffic was disrupted for several minutes before firemen raised hose line on racks above street car tracks.

Mrs. Dolores Schneider, 949 Longfellow street, was first to see the flames. She spread the alarm and occupants of the building hastily gathered belongings and fled to the street.

Three women—Mrs. Ruth Brodsky, Mrs. Abe Newman and Mrs. Joseph Salvatore—carried their small babies to safety. No one was injured and the principal loss—estimated at $5,000—was caused by water.

Trail of Peanuts Traps Monkeys in Spree at City Hall

Chicago, Dec. 10 (U.P.).—A trail of peanuts saved 15 monkeys for science today after they had been brought from New York by airplane and escaped from their cages in City Hall.

Terrified stenographers fled as the monkeys, 18 inches to 2 feet tall, scampered through transoms and swung from light fixtures. Dr. Herman N. Bundesen, city health director, suffered a gash on his hand when a monkey bit him. Finally somebody brought some peanuts and laid a trail leading into a corner, where the monkeys were trapped under wire baskets.

They will be used in an attempt to solve a mysterious malady among babies at St. Elizabeth's Hospital.

The importance of training was stressed by Lieut. James R. Kirkland, United States Naval Reserve, who spoke on experiences in Spanish waters aboard the new cruiser, Quincy. Lieut. Col. George R. Lull, assistant commandant of the Field Service Medical School, Carlisle Barracks, Pa., also spoke at the meeting, which was presided over by Col. Dunlap P. Penhallow.

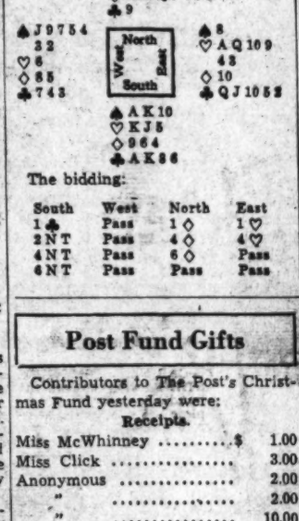
Contract

By Mrs. Ely Culbertson

The Safer Contract.

It is generally understood and appreciated that suit contracts offer greater safety than notrumps—this, of course, assuming that the declarer has long and strong trumps at his disposal. But, like everything else at Bridge, the rule is no more important than the exception. On certain occasions notrump is actually safer than the most solid trump suit.

South, dealer.
North-South vulnerable.
Match-point duplicate.



The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♣	Pass	1 ◇	1 ♡
2 N T	Pass	4 ◇	4 ♡
4 N T	Pass	6 ◇	Pass
6 N T	Pass	Pass	Pass

South's persistence toward notrump was not due solely to the fact that he was playing match-point duplicate and that he wanted to get the last possible point out of the hand. That, of course, was the main reason for his taking six-diamonds out to six notrump. But, even in Rubber Bridge, he would have adopted the same course. South's hand, distributed as it was, offered no special inducement toward trump play. Not only did he have no ruffing power, since he had no short suit, but neither did he have any long suit that could be established by North's ruffing. Finally, he recognized North's diamond bidding as practically guaranteeing a long solid diamond suit that would be just as valuable at notrump as it would with diamonds as trump, and there would be no danger of either opponent ruffing away one of South's sure tricks.

Obviously, the heart Ace was the only trick the defenders could take against six notrump. But, equally obviously, six diamonds would have been doomed to defeat by the opening lead of a heart, and heart continuation for West to ruff.

THE FEDERAL DIARY

By Scott Hart.

Reunion at Greenbelt.

The Greenbelt citizen was torn between two excitements; Mrs. Roosevelt had paid a surprise visit to Greenbelt, had come to his very home, and he had been made custodian of an emphatic resolution calling on that vague thing, the Government, to let Greenbelters vote on keeping their pets, specifically, their dogs.

"Sit in that chair, the one with the arms; that's the chair Mrs. Roosevelt sat in this morning. And here are the pictures of Red, the ribbons; he won first and second prize—but that has nothing to do with a man loving his dog; a man would love his dog whether the dog had any ribbons or not . . .

"You know, Red is taking this thing awfully hard; he doesn't like being separated from me. The man let me know that after I'd left Red the other night, the dog wouldn't eat any supper and whined all night long. I mean the man who is keeping Red. Yes, sir, that rule is breaking their hearts around here. There's one family that had to separate from their dog and it put the lady in bed. I'm going around now to see Red. I keep him as close around here as I can . . ."

We followed behind him. He drove down a country road, one of the red clay spokes against the Greenbelt hub. He drove through country that must delight Red, if Irish setters are good for anything but pets. Then he drove abruptly into a narrow road that had bushy sides, wheeled the car into the red clay road again and called out: "Sorry, that isn't the road Red is living on." He finally came to the farmhouse where Red was being boarded, and the dog must have known the car's motor, for he set up a frenzy of yowls and began cavorting like a night club dancer when the trumpets are unloosed.

"That is Red," the Greenbelter shouted from his car. Someone came out the house and flipped the long chain from the dog's collar. The Greenbelter hugged his pet. The dog tried to hug the Greenbelter. There were many words and much barking, the friendly sort of barking.

"I wish I could keep Red at home," said the Greenbelter.

He looked at the broad, green fields surrounding Greenbelt. "That dog is a real hunter," he said. "You can say what you want about the Irish setters; they don't range much, but this dog will hunt. It wouldn't do much good, of course; they've got all the land posted. But that isn't the point. I'd like to keep the dog at home. And even if I let the dog come to see me I'm breaking the regulations.

"It's the main issue in Greenbelt right now . . ." He put the chain back on Red's collar and drove away. All which little episode can't prove but one thing: There isn't going to be any peace at Greenbelt until somebody in that vague thing we call the Government settles, once, for all and speedily, that dog question. There's going to be growling from both dogs and men as long as dogs, pets, are maintained on the green outsides of Greenbelt and the owners have even a little hope that the regulations may be rescinded.

However, cruel the thought may be, it would be better for the Government to tell them flatly, finally, that pets are not going to be allowed on the premises. This, at least, would settle the uncertainty and the owners might become reconciled. This thing of being compelled to hold Greenbelt reunions in the outskirts where the woodbine twineth and screens the dogs from official view is doing exactly what you guess—causing discontent in the greenest fields of all the Abundant Pastures.

Another Ogpu?

Or is the natural urge to become alarmed just too compelling? At all events, a certain paragraph in the report of the director of personnel, Agriculture Department, affords a moment for pause. Let's quote from it: "It is highly desirable that personnel investigations, involving delinquency, misconduct and fiscal and other irregularities on the part of employes, be conducted with as little delay as possible, in order that corrective measures may be promptly taken with a view to eliminating from the service dishonest or otherwise undesirable employes." . . . "It is believed that with an adequate number of properly trained investigators, well versed in fiscal procedure, regulations, etc., it would be possible to prevent a great many cases of fiscal and other irregularities and to discover others before they became well-established practices". . .

And right there a chorus is going up: "Don't you remember the Interior Ogpu?" The employes will view the whole thing as nothing but a new piece (if not new, then enlarged) of machinery for their harassment. Put them in, and you will soon be hearing all manner of stories about dictaphones and strange men with whiskers and gleams in their eyes.

Crosland Retires.

Associates of George M. Crosland will give him a testimonial dinner Thursday evening in recognition of his retirement from the position of assistant director, Traffic Bureau, ICC. Crosland was appointed to the Commission's staff from South Carolina in 1889 and is the senior employe of the body. Besides serving as assistant director of the Traffic Bureau, he is chief of the section of Tariffs, and a member of several boards, including the board of suspension.

The dinner will be at the Willard Hotel at 7:30 p. m. Attending will be the Commission members, a large group of employes and many railroad officials with whom Crosland came into close contact. The arrangements are being made by a committee, headed by W. A. Myers, chairman.

Mr. Landon's Statement.

Former Gov. Landon has greatly helped regeneration of the Republican Party by his unequivocal statement that he would not accept the Presidential nomination in 1940 "in the remote contingency that the Republican National Convention should offer it to me."

This could not have been an easy statement to make. It is, as Mr. Landon says, "presumptuous for a man to decline something that has not been offered to him." Aside from that, real unselfishness is required when any ambitious man voluntarily renounces a goal which only recently seemed attainable. Furthermore, personal pride is deeply involved when a defeated challenger, whether in the fields of sport or politics, refuses for impersonal reasons to attempt a comeback.

But at the risk of being misunderstood, and at the cost of his own feelings, Mr. Landon has definitely ruled himself out as a Presidential possibility for 1940. He has done so because he rightly sees that he can be more useful to his party if he denies, beyond possibility of misconception, all desire to be more than a hardworking and competent lieutenant. And it is capable lieutenants, far more than Presidential aspirants, which the opposition party needs in the work of reconstruction which lies immediately ahead of it.

Much spade work in the field of reorganization lies ahead of the Republican Party, if it is to close and successfully consolidate its torn ranks. And the man who will eventually emerge as party standard bearer is likely to be one who at the present time gives all his energies, and all his thought, to the uninspiring workaday task which is immediately in hand.

For that reason Mr. Landon does more than add further prestige to his name by this forthright act of abnegation. He also, by one of those paradoxes which rule politics, strengthens his claim to leadership by refusing to be regarded as the present leader. In this, as in so many instances, time is likely to demonstrate that the straightforward, unambiguous action is also that which brings most widespread public recognition.

In Good Spirit.

The closing address of Colby M. Chester, chairman of the National Association of Manufacturers, probably throws more light on what leaders in the business world are thinking and feeling than the resolutions adopted by the N. A. M.

The latter necessarily represent a compromise of conflicting viewpoints. Or they reflect the opinions of determined minorities whom the majority thinks it impolitic or not worth while to oppose. This sort of give and take is not confined to gatherings of businessmen. It is found whenever large bodies of men come together to frame political platforms, issue social or economic manifestoes, or make any other declaration of belief to which all can subscribe.

Mr. Chester is not constrained by such hampering considerations as govern the framers of resolutions. Hence he has been able to make a very worth-while contribution to current discussion of the major problems that concern businessmen as a class, apart from their narrower special interests.

His emphasis upon the responsibility of businessmen to give service to the community as well as to ask fair treatment strikes a sympathetic note. It is followed by some very explicit declarations as to why the group for whom he speaks has opposed certain regulatory acts and proposals of the Administration.

In his concluding suggestion that Government sit down with business and labor to discuss plans for a solution of industry's problems, there is evidence of a new spirit of inquiry and accommodation that deserves the closest attention in Washington.

The District Lunacy Law.

Dr. Winfred Overholser, superintendent of St. Elizabeths Hospital, asks for a change in the District lunacy law. In this he deserves better support from the community than his predecessor, the late Dr. White, and others interested in the reform have received.

Like many sections of the District code, the prevailing lunacy law is badly outdated. Almost every State has improved on the methods of dealing with insanity in vogue 30 years ago; but not the District. Commitment to an asylum here still involves a public trial in a criminal court before a jury of laymen. Worse still from the standpoint of modern psychiatry, the alleged incompetent is required to be present in the courtroom. To hear friends and relatives testify against him often blights all chances for a deranged man's recovery.

What is needed is a system which would permit a person mentally sick to enter a hospital with no more stigma than if he had, for instance, a thoracic affliction. A bill introduced a year ago by Senator King looks toward just such a reform. Eliminating the trial procedure it would set up a lunacy commission consisting of a full-time lawyer and eight doctors, who would rotate in service with two available at all times. The commission would investigate lunacy cases and make recommendations to the District Court. Senator King's bill, moreover, would permit voluntary admissions to St. Elizabeths—an innovation urged by psychiatrists.

But, sad to report, a subcommittee headed by Senator McCarran has failed utterly to act on the proposal. At the coming regular session perhaps District doctors can head up a movement to stir at least hearings on the bill. Not only does revulsion at the present barbarous treatment of unfortunate individuals recommend this; the fact that Washington as the National Capital attracts a high proportion of abnormal characters makes a modern and efficient lunacy law doubly desirable.

The Railroads' Petition.

The ICC's denial of the unprecedented appeal of the railroads for immediate application of requested rate increases will only emphasize the handicaps under which highly regulated industries operate, especially when a time of crisis demands prompt action.

Although hearings on the rate petition have been expedited, the procedure followed is nevertheless time-consuming. Moreover, even if increases should be granted, there will now be dangerous delay in putting new rate schedules into effect. Since President Roosevelt plainly intimated yesterday that he considered prompt action by the ICC essential to preserve the solvency of the roads, and permit them to continue under private management, the rejection of the petition for immediate rate increases is the more disturbing.

The railroads are seriously hampered, not only by rigid rate schedules which cannot be changed without official permission and then only after a lapse of time, but also by rapidly increasing production costs which they are powerless to control. While it is unthinkable that we should ever revert to unregulated competition in the railroad field, the mistakes of policy that have made it impossible for the roads to earn a fair rate of return on their investment are a standing warning against too rapid extension of Government regulation to other industries.

Of course the financial difficulties of the country's railways are due to a combination of causes. But their situation has been made immeasurably worse by failure of the regulatory authorities to view their problems as a whole, and to adjust rates to operating costs so as to allow a reasonable margin between income and outgo.

Of late years the pressure to keep rates down, while operating costs have been rapidly rising, has prevented the roads from sharing as they should have done in the benefits of recovery. Indeed, last July before the current business recession began to be generally felt, and prior to the latest increases in railway wages, net operating income began to fall below the level of the preceding year. Since then the deterioration has been progressive. Net operating income for October was almost one-third below the level of the preceding year. A subsequent heavy drop in November carloadings has added to the gloom.

With wage increases in full force, increased taxes in prospect and business on the down grade, the roads are in no position to weather the crisis ahead unless they can add to their revenues. Relief in the form of rate increases is not only considered essential to save certain roads from bankruptcy. It is also needed to bring the roads into the market as buyers and to prevent wholesale discharge of employes. In other words, general business recovery is in no small measure contingent on the outcome of the rate petition. And the danger is that irreparable damage may be done before action is taken.

Italy And The League.

In the 18 years that have elapsed since it came into being, the League of Nations has survived a multitude of shocks. There is every reason to believe, therefore, that it will survive the resignation of Italy, which is now foreshadowed.

Obviously the League minus the United States, Germany, Italy and Japan—four of the seven great powers—is a far different League from that contemplated by the men who wrote the Covenant. But the strength of the underlying idea is revealed in the way it has withstood the terrific battering it has received. Now, as at all times during the past 18 years, there is a paramount need for an international clearing house. And this clearing house will accomplish as much or as little as its membership desires.

The withdrawal of Italy from the League would, in one important respect, clarify the international situation. The three aggressive "have-not" powers would then all be outside the Geneva organization, even as is the United States. But the latter has been showing increasing disposition to lend moral support to the League and, as far as practical co-operation goes, has long been much more helpful to Geneva than is Italy.

The League was founded on the theory that all peoples and all nations want peace and are willing to work for it. The events of the past six years, however, have cast very real doubts on the validity of this. While it continues to hold good for the great majority of nations, the presumption is now very dubious so far as the Fascist dictatorships and Japan are concerned.

But the absence of these powers from the League may serve to consolidate the likeminded nations that remain. On the one side will be the three aggressors. On the other side there will be the League nations and those, such as the United States, which are sympathetic to the League's strivings. Thus the lines are being drawn between those nations which believe in peace and those which, regardless of their commitments, still regard war as a useful instrument of national policy.

Incentive For Co-operation.

The decision to add 350,000 persons to work relief rolls should not be misinterpreted. It does not mean that the business recession has resulted in any sudden and widespread increase in the number of families needing relief. Nor does it mean that hope for a balanced budget must be abandoned.

Relief expenditures normally increase at this time of year. Cold weather makes it much more difficult for families living on the border line of charity to take care of themselves. In some parts of the country the decline of agricultural activity extends the volume of unemployment. Every year of its operation the WPA has attempted to relieve the distress resulting from these factors by taking on more men at the real onset of winter.

To a considerable extent, therefore, the current step-up of work-relief expenditures is a seasonal adjustment. Unemployment has undoubtedly increased. But there has not yet been time for any substantial demands for relief, aside from the seasonal variation, to be felt at the WPA. That agency is merely accelerating a predetermined plan to enlarge its activities during the cold months.

Since allowance has been made for heavier expenditures for the next few months, a new relief appropriation should not be necessary. Any demand for additional funds will depend entirely upon whether or not the increase in unemployment is more than temporary. That fact sharply emphasizes the desirability of concentrating attention upon the causes of the present economic setback.

Unless this is soon overcome a heavier relief burden will inevitably fall upon cities and States as well as on the Federal Government. And it will come at a time when the necessity for economy can no longer be dodged. Realization of that fact has already stimulated the Administration's interest in tax revision, a new housing program, a better working relationship with the utilities and other constructive activities. But it can scarcely be said that rapid headway is being made in any of these undertakings.

Moreover, a few specific efforts of a constructive sort are not likely to turn the tide from recession to recovery unless a substantial basis of mutual understanding is established between the Government and business leaders. It is the urgency of that task to which reports of increasing unemployment point.

Moscow Mystery.

If it had happened in a book instead of in the actual world, the case of Mr. and Mrs. Donald L. Robinson would be such voluptuous, grewsome stuff for midnight reading that it is doubtful if even Wilkie Collins or Mrs. Belloc Lowndes could have bettered it.

Robinson and his wife had been in Russia a month, living at the National Hotel, next door to the American Embassy. One day Mrs. Robinson returns to the hotel to find that her husband has vanished without explanation or trace. When she makes inquiries, all she can learn is that Robinson had become ill and had been transferred to an "iron lung"—a sinister pair of words. When Mrs. Robinson asks for particulars, such, for instance, as the name of the hospital, she is answered with ominous evasions. Then Mrs. Robinson vanishes as suddenly, as inexplicably and as thoroughly as her husband.

No sooner has she gone than "a Russian-speaking man" moves into her room and presently porters are seen carrying out the "mattress, bedstead, blankets and rug." And yet, according to the United Press, "there was nothing to indicate the Robinsons were under arrest."

Of course, the censorship being what it is, it is possible to read that sentence either straight or in reverse. But either way it is full of creeps and shivers. The G. P. U. and its ways are a reality that transcends the imagination of any mystery story writer; but if the G. P. U. doesn't know what happened to the Robinsons, the mystery itself is greater than any Poe himself could have devised. The only way, apparently, you could work it out is to assume the Robinsons have been dissolved and have gone down a drain. But even that would leave the "iron lung," the "Russian-speaking man" and the business about the bedstead and mattress on your hands.

Even the most cunningly contrived mystery story generally provides a corpse or two. And the classic, or French Surete style, police mystery, like that of poor Jean De Koven, whose body was found this week under the porch of a villa, near Paris, sooner or later provides one. But there is only an off chance that anything so tangible will turn up in the Robinson case. There they liquidate more things than capitalism.

'Collective Security.'

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A popular slogan among various European powers, and echoed here by certain so-called liberals and a group of noisy former radicals, is the cry for "collective security," to be achieved through some sort of joint action against Fascism. Great Britain, as usual, is adroitly endeavoring to form several sets of alliances with a view to the reestablishment of the old balance of power theory and fundamentally, the rehabilitation of her own supremacy in diplomacy and of her leadership in European and world affairs.

It is obvious to radicals that the powers thus engaged are thinking in terms of alleged nationalism and that they are really seeking their own advantage and are ready to stick knives into the backs of their erstwhile associates the moment it serves their purposes.

I am reminded of the fate that befell an ancestor of mine—a certain Mr. Anthropoid—several millions of years ago. He and his tribe, suffering much from the depredations of larger animals, slept in trees, and numerous catastrophes occurred when they fell during their sleep. My ancestor and one of his friends devised the plan of tying their tails together over a strong limb for "collective security."

All went well during the night, but when my ancestor started to descend in the morning, he shouted, testily, "Let loose of my tail." The other replied, "What are you trying to do, pull me down?" They glared at each other and then started to fight. One had an eye gouged out and the other had an ear bitten off, and both lost copiously of hide and hair. The outcome was that both fell to the ground. My ancestor, with his dying breath, murmured, "There is no use in being 'dove-tailed' together for 'collective security' unless you have the sense to recognize the mutual responsibilities en-tailed and are able to co-operate instead of seeking to get the advantage over your fellow."

Commissioners' Parking Ban.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In The Post of December 9 in connection with your article on the snow parking ban the statement is made that in the recent decision of the Court of Appeals it held that . . . it is within the power of the District Commissioners to promulgate any parking regulation which they see fit."

The commonly accepted meaning of this decision is that the Commissioners may promulgate any parking regulation that is reasonable.

Saluting The Flag.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I feel compelled to make some observations on an article which has recently appeared regarding a child who stated her religion prevented her from saluting the American flag.

It should be considered a legal offense for anyone to refuse to salute the American flag. It appears particularly necessary where children are concerned, because we know that when they refuse to salute the flag they are not voicing their own sentiment but the sentiment of adults.

The religious stand on which children are putting their refusal should give every American great food for thought. What kind of religion is it that teaches disloyalty to the home and the parent? Our country, either through birth or adoption, is our home and our parent. It protects us in time of peace and war. We elect those we think most fitted to represent us and make this protection possible. It has been proved the world over time without end that there has to be a common law for the good of all. Our country is that law, and when a religion says that the worshipers in it should not pledge allegiance to the symbol that stands for the common good of all, they are going against one of the finest teachings of Jesus Christ that "we should love our neighbors as ourselves."

When we salute the flag or pledge allegiance to it, we are not merely expressing our own views but those which should be for the benefit of all. As a united Nation we have a recognized and respected place in the world. Any condition contrary to this must play havoc with the peace and happiness of the American home and incidently bring upon us the ridicule of our neighbors.

Motorized 'Saucisses.'

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: May a word be said about the "sausage" balloons described in The Post of December 5?

Of course I do not like to detract from the glory of our American inventors, but this idea of a dirigible observation balloon is not new to France. Some time ago they transformed their old war-time stationary "saucisses" into dirigible balloons by the simple and economical method of using small powered gondolas in place of the observation gondolas. Jefferson Memorial.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have been interested in the discussion of the Jefferson Memorial. As I see it he erected his own memorial—in the Constitution of the United States of America. It now seems a fitting tribute to this great statesman that definite steps be taken by the people of the United States to perpetuate forever those principles which are embodied in the document he gave to us. This could not be done by erecting a stone pile which would become only a curiosity to gaze upon as the centuries pass.

A better way to honor him as I see it would be to place the sacred document which all lovers of liberty revere, the Constitution, in a fitting setting, in bronze in a cabinet or receptacle of permanent construction in the Capitol centrally located under the dome, with a tablet dedicated to Thomas Jefferson.

Above, overshadowing it, should be placed a lighted candle, to be kept burning continually throughout the years, never to be extinguished, symbolizing the torch of liberty which he set burning to lighten the minds and understanding of mankind.

Let the people of the United States of America say to the world, which at this time needs new assurance, that liberty of the individual and peoples must be preserved and not allowed to die from the face of the earth.

Japanese Boycott.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In respect to advocating boycotting of Japanese goods, due deliberation should be given to the detrimental effect such a move would have upon our various industries and laborers.

Our largest foreign client for the South's cotton crop during the last six years has been Japan. Purchases have averaged over 1,600,000 bales a season. Many other articles were bought in large quantities. We buy over 90 per cent of our yearly silk requirements from Japan. Other countries are not in a position to supply our market. Silk hosiery and garment plants in New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania and other Eastern States, together with the allied trades, support hundreds of thousands of people.

For the seasons of 1935 and 1936, Japan bought from us $407,000,000 worth and sold us $323,000,000. Compare these figures with our Chinese business during that period, when we sold her $85,000,000 worth and bought $137,000,000. Going back five years, Japan bought from us on balance $75,000,000 more than we sold to her.

It seems to me that people should not encourage boycotting, for our workers would be seriously affected by such a procedure.

The Problem Of Consumption

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Congress of American Industry, in its eight-plank platform for 1938, says: "The onward march of the American people can be resumed and continued only if American industry produces more so that all can have more."

The average American knows that. He also knows that a large part of our economic plant is idle along with a considerable percentage of our workers who should be employed.

The national survey of potential product capacity shows that without enlargement of our present economic plant we can produce 60 per cent more than we produced in 1929, our top year; and that if we put to work all Americans who should be employed we will run the plant to the capacity to produce 60 per cent more than in 1929.

Who will consume it?

The American people have the capacity to consume all of it, except such small part as we would need to exchange abroad for things we do not ourselves have—if they had the necessary buying power.

To employ all our workers (and thus escape a continuing unemployment problem) we must run our economic plant to its capacity, resulting in real mass production. We cannot have mass production without mass consumption. We cannot have mass consumption without mass buying power.

Who will invent the necessary economic technique to put and sustain in our economic system a mass buying power equal to our mass production?

Until that is done why talk about producing more? It is futile. We can easily produce too much for our present buying power—hence the "recession." That recession can be checked and reversed only with a greatly added buying power in the hands of the masses, where it will be spent immediately.

Why not call a congress of American industry to discuss consumption instead of production? Do not these eminent gentlemen know that our productive abilities are now far ahead of our consumption abilities, due to low buying power?

Producing goods is only half the job of the real industrial statesman. When may we expect him to do the other half of his job?

Until he does, depressions will curse him and all of us.

Calls For Breathing Spell.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: What would the New Deal do in the event of another depression brought on by its own acts and excesses? This is an interesting if somewhat painful and alarming question. The limit of national credit has been tested, if not absolutely reached, all bombastic talk of politicians on the subject "to the contrary notwithstanding."

The New Deal's effort to "solve" one depression has almost led the country into another. Its highest "accomplishments" have been palliatives; the general picture of "results" a mess.

More clearly than ever is indicated the need of positive action to relieve the stagnation, release the brakes stalling forward momentum. Too much time is being squandered easing up the foolish and stifling laws which insured the "recession."

There must be promise of a breathing spell sufficiently lengthy to enable industry and small enterprise to accomplish what the New Deal politicians have so completely failed at—unless the record national debt is a measure of their success.

Contests.

"WHAT is a synonym for mild?" Ann asked.

"Mild? How about tame?" I offered absently.

"Silly! Can I say a cigarette is tame?"

And then I remembered. Ann is engrossed in a contest, a great national one, in which she hopes to win a fabulous amount of money. Ann is always in a contest. "How do you happen to find so many?" I asked her.

"Oh, I take a contest magazine and read the papers and listen to the radio. There's always a good contest to enter, and I get a kick out of them."

I thought of the millions of Americans who "get a kick out of them" and I decided that here is the Great American Pastime. It satisfies the Mr. Micawber in each of us. It is the magic "something" that is "going to turn up." I said as much to Ann. She tore her attention away from filling blank balloons with succinct praise of cigarettes, and agreed.

"You're right. This twentieth century ought to be called the Contest Century."

• • • •

This twentieth century? I began to wonder. Ann and I had been told of a contest in the early nineteen hundreds, when housewives and little boys tried to count the closely clustered dots in a picture of Dan Patch, the famous race horse. They stuck pins carefully in each dot and then counted the pins, or ran a pencil line through the dots and dropped a grain of corn in a box for each. But was that the first big contest?

Ann said, "Oh, of course athletic contests. There were the Olympic Games of ancient Greece. But not real up-to-date contests with prizes and everything."

I felt disposed to argue. Didn't Shakespeare tell of a contest in Venice nearly 350 years ago? He did. I looked it up. In that one Bassanio found it hard to judge the contents of three caskets from the inscriptions, but not too hard. He won first prize—the brilliant and lovely Portia. He didn't have to inclose three wrappers or a carton top with his entry, but he would have suffered a penalty for losing.

Ann, I thought, probably would have felt a bond of sympathy with the Prince of Morocco, who said, when, he, too, was trying to win Portia:

And so may I, blind fortune leading me,
Miss that which one unworthier may attain,
And die with grieving . . .

though I scarcely expected to see Ann die from failure to win. She'd only find another opportunity and immediately begin trusting "blind fortune" and her own skill again.

• • • •

Even the Bible records contests. Didn't David kill Goliath in one? And back in 538 B. C. King Belshazzar gave a feast to a thousand of his lords, and after he and his princes, wives and concubines had drunk wine from the golden vessels which had been looted from the temple in Jerusalem, he saw the fingers of a man's hand appear out of nowhere and write some words on the walls of the palace. On seeing this "the king's joints were loosed and his knees smote one against the other," as whose wouldn't?

Then he announced his contest. Whoever should interpret the writing should have a chain of gold about his neck, and should be the third ruler of the kingdom. The magicians, astrologers, Chaldeans and soothsayers tried and failed, and Daniel, a captive Jew, won the contest. He not only interpreted the writing, "Thou art weighed in the balances and art found wanting," but he threw in a good moral lesson as well.

"But beauty contests," Ann said. "They, at least, are distinctly twentieth century, with their parades, and their prizes, ranging from the titles, Miss Rosedale or Miss Universe, to stardom in Hollywood."

But I remembered that 2,500 years or more ago beauty contests were held in Yucatan. The prize for the fairest Mayan maidens was death in the deep well at Chichen Itza, as a sacrifice to their god.

• • • •

The rewards in contests are interesting in themselves. They chart the progress of the human race. Dan Patch and his dots offered as first prize a pony and trap. A recent toilet soap contest offered a trailer. In the old fairy tales the prize was usually the hand of a beautiful princess. Today you may win a washing machine, electric refrigerator, radio, an automobile, a Mediterranean cruise, an annuity, or almost anything you'd like.

I said all of this to Ann. I remarked upon the number of people who enter contests and challenged her to name three of her acquaintances who had never been in one. I worked up to quite a climax.

"If all contestants were laid end to end," I said, "what grand material for a contest they'd make. Just guess how far they'd reach and win . . ."

Ann, pencil poised, looked dreamily at me, through me, and beyond me.

"Always fresh," she murmured. "No how can I say that in a forceful way?"

Fair Enough

Poker Game.

THERE WAS a poker game—two rich guys and four other guys. The four other guys didn't have any money to speak of, but the rich guys had to deal them in because you can't play two-handed poker, and it is no fun high-spading back and forth. The poor guys were necessary for a quorum.

PEGLER.

So the house said, "We are going to have to rejigger the kitty in this game. If one of you rich guys wins a pot you have to kick back up to 80 per cent. Then we will use part of it to stake the poor guys when they run out of chips. The rest of it we will use to pay for the sandwiches and beer and the porters and rent and the cops and all."

At first the rich guys thought this was fair enough. It was a nice, comfortable joint, and they had been doing all right.

But after a while they began to mutter about the kitty, and there came a terrible squawk when one of them took down a real big pot. He reached for the pot, but just then the house said, "Hold on a minute, chum, till we figure this out. Let's see. Toontooz four and six-ten and eightums-eight is 64, plus 30 per cent surtax and how about that stack of blues I saw you stick into your side pocket? We will have to charge you 80 per cent penalty for that evasion."

• • • •

"EVASION!" the guy yelled. "What do you mean—evasion? That side pocket is my holding company. Get out the book. Get it out. Show me where it says you can't put your chips in your side pocket or your flask pocket or any pocket you want to. It's a free country."

"Makes no never-mind about a free country," the house said. "We got to take care of these poor guys or you won't have no poker game. It will just bust up in a fight, and you will be lucky you don't lose your pants. And the sandwiches and beer and heat and light and the ice bill and all. Listen. You guys get as much sandwiches and beer and heat and light as anybody else."

"Sandwiches and beer is all right," the rich guy said, "but how about all this caviar and champagne you are slopping around, and, anyway, the joint is overheated and the light's too bright. It hurts my eyes. You are wasting a lot of dough."

"Oh, shut up," one of the poor guys said, "or we will dump you rich mugs down the dumbwaiter and take over and run some other kind of game. We will deal blackjack just among ourselves and with your dough.

"You and who else?" the rich guy said.

"Me and my pals here," the poor guy said, and with that he made a pass at the rich guy, who yelled to the house, "Hey! Give a look. Can't you keep order in the joint? Why don't you hire some more bouncers with all that kitty you are squandering around for caviar and wine and statues in the hallway?"

"But, listen," the other rich guy said to the house, "I'm a right guy, I'm all for your idea of staking these mugs out of the kitty to keep the game going, but put yourself in my place: Here I risk a whole hatful of chips and play my cards right while these dopes are raising on the draw to inside straights and bobtailed flushes, and when I win a pot you are right there with that big mitt. How about if it comes a time when I can't win for losing three or four times around? You are killing my initiative and enterprise acting like this. Why should I toss in 8 inches of my good, hard-earned blues to win a couple of lousy little whites?"

• • • •

THE POOR GUYS laughed out loud at the mention of "hard-earned" blues, and the house, who was kind of tough, especially toward the rich guys, said "economic royalist" and "well-fed clubman," and called for a new deal. The rich guys got pretty sick of the term "new deal."

But the house began to notice that no matter how much kitty the poor guys got they were always broke. One poor guy proposed dividing up all the dough equally and another had some scheme to let the poor guys go shy and take down the amount they were shy, even if they lost.

Then, in the hope of stimulating the game, the house just abandoned the regular rules and began to deal a lot of crazy games like seven-toed Pete and high-low with the red sevens and the one-eyed Jacks wild.

"This aint poker," one of the rich guys said finally. "This ain't even rummy or casino or anything. Cash me in. I'm going to quit."

At this the four poor guys shoved back their chairs, grabbed pool cues and barred the door, but the house reached for the rich guy's pile and began to count up.

"Set down! Set down!" the house said to the poor guys. "If he wants to cash in he can cash in. But when a rich guy cashes in we take down 60 or 80 per cent, according to how much he has got. We call it the inheritance tax."

Elmer Discovers a Farmer.

Mayor LaGuardia of New York Champions the Farmers.

"Well," said Elmer Twitchell today, "I've just got back from a visit from that well-known American farmer Fiorello (Zeke) LaGuardia, whose championship of farmers' rights recently stirred the country. I spent several days on the LaGuardia farmlands on the rich soil of the Empire State Building.

• • • •

"There's nothing he don't raise. Talk about two crops a year! Why he gets two or three crops per paragraph! The mayor was pretty busy milking his great herds of Guernseys most of the time. Such herds! They stretched out as far as the eye could see clear from Park Row away uptown to his 1940 ambitions.

• • • •

"The mayor was milking six and eight cows at a time without half trying and was two broadcasts ahead of time on his butter and cheese program. And you should see his hens! They didn't lay up to expectations at first, but he just raged through the hen houses, his hair in his eyes, telling them where they got off, and the next morning every hen had laid two eggs!

• • • •

"It's the same way with crops. Fiorello takes no nonsense about silly stuff like germination, seasonal growth, etc. He just plants the seeds and gets a crop immediately or else. I saw him fly into a rage in a backward corn patch, and inside of four hours he had a bumper crop all the way from about the Brooklyn Bridge to the Yankee Stadium.

• • • •

"I walked with him through a radish field. It didn't seem to be co-operating, and Fiorello just glared at it and beat his fists together. The next morning he dug up some radish plants and what do you think was on the roots? Watermelons! There ain't another farmer just like him in all the country!

• • • •

"Yes siree, it's a thrill to see Zeke in jumpers, cow-hide boots and big straw hat stepping over the rich acres of midtown Manhattan, plow in one hand and a pair of oxen in the other and with a whole farm program slung carelessly over his left shoulder."

Mr. Twitchell was plainly impressed. "It's as good as settled," he concluded. "Zeke LaGuardia, the farmboy of the Hudson, will be the farmers' choice for President next election!"

Disfranchised South

Alabama Observer Sees In Supreme Court Decision Encouragement For Abolition Of Vote-Dampening Poll Taxes.

By Carroll Kilpatrick.
Special Correspondence of The Post.

Montgomery.

THE RECENT decision of the United States Supreme Court, holding constitutional a Georgia law requiring persons to pay all accumulated poll taxes before they can vote, revives debate over suffrage laws in the disfranchised South.

With the ratification three-quarters of a century ago of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Federal Constitution, Southern States—then in the bog of Reconstruction—were quick to seize any weapon available that might be effective in the fight to disfranchise the large Negro population.

Poll Tax Designed To Disfranchise Negro.

THE ALMOST universal plan finally adopted was the imposition of a poll tax as a prerequisite to voting. The poverty-stricken former slave, unable to pay the $1.50 or $2 head tax, was thus deprived of the right to vote. Today the Southern Negro has lost almost all political identity.

Furthermore, the tax that was levied to disfranchise the Negro has disfranchised as well an alarmingly large percentage of the white population. In the eight Southern States still making the payment of an annual poll tax a prerequisite to voting, a smaller percentage of the population goes to the polls than in non-Southern States.

In West Virginia, where there is no voter poll tax, 88 per cent of the population over 21 years of age voted in the 1936 general election. But in South Carolina only 13 per cent voted; in Alabama, 19 per cent; in Georgia, 19 per cent; in Virginia, 24 per cent; in Arkansas, 17 per cent; in Mississippi, 16 per cent; in Texas, 25 per cent, and in Tennessee, 31 per cent. In 38 States where the poll tax is not imposed, more than 50 per cent of the adult population voted in the 1936 election.

For several years there has been marked agitation for the repeal, or at least modification, of poll tax requirements. In 1934, Frank M. Dixon, candidate for Governor in Alabama, ran on a platform advocating modification of the suffrage restrictions. He was defeated by a small majority. It was evident, nevertheless, that the State was considerably concerned about the provision requiring a person to pay all back poll taxes, even from his twenty-first birthday, before becoming eligible to vote. Thousands of Alabamians got behind in the depression years, and now they are unable to pay the accumulated tax.

Southern Policy Group Advocates Repeal Of Tax.

AT A MEETING more than a year ago in Chattanooga, Tenn., the Southern Policy Committee adopted a resolution urging "removal of those qualifications for voting which are designed to, or operate to, disfranchise the unpossessed."

At the meeting little thought was given to the Negro vote. Regardless of the views of the Policy Committee, its members knew that no modification of the poll tax laws would affect, except in a few cases, the Negro who wanted to vote. Other methods have proved effective in keeping him away from the polls. A great many Southerners, deeply concerned over the question of Negro suffrage, have been unable to reach any general or satisfactory agreement.

If the poll tax laws are revised, and a larger number of Southerners become voters, most of them will be whites and not Negroes.

In opposing poll tax reform in Alabama, the Montgomery Advertiser has argued: "By repealing the cumulative poll tax article we will do but simple justice to a large number of worthy and thoughtful citizens. At the same time by repealing it, in view of the fact that the dole has come to stay, and in view of the character of demagogues who are ready at all times to vie with one another in offering voters all that the public treasury contains in return for their votes, the Advertiser's considered opinion is that the repeal of this article would invest the pauperized thousands of our people with the balance of power in Alabama politics."

The Birmingham News and the Age-Herald have advocated a plan whereby the prospective voter would be required to pay only the last three years' tax in order to qualify. John Temple Graves 2d, columnist for eight Southern newspapers, has argued for the complete repeal of the cumulative provision.

Virginia Leads Fight To Abolish Restriction.

AT THE MOMENT the most concerted fight for the poll tax revision is being made in Virginia. The two Richmond papers are split over the issue. The News Leader has opposed reform, while the Times-Dispatch has led the fight for revision. A short time ago the Times-Dispatch reprinted a long article from the Southern Planter, listing the evils of the present poll tax laws.

One pouplar argument, especially at this time when the country is divided into New Deal and anti-New Deal camps, has been that the poll tax has acted to silence Southern minority opinion. Many Southern Republicans long ago quit paying poll taxes, for, they said their votes would never be an important factor in any political decision.

A factor that has not been generally considered—but which is of great consequences to the region—is that hereafter representation in Democratic national conventions will be computed on the basis of the Democratic vote in the respective States. The Times-Dispatch has pointed out that, in view of the loss to the South of the weapon of the two-thirds rule, the only way the South "can augment its prestige in the convention is by increasing the total Democratic vote in the several Southern States."

In 1920, North Carolina abolished the voter poll tax, and today 50 per cent of her adult population goes to the polls on election day. Literacy requirements are in force, instead of the dubious economic requirements that had formerly prevailed.

Repeal, or modification, of poll tax laws in Southern States raises questions not easily resolved. But there is now a trend toward an easing of the voter restrictions. No States outside the South require the payment of poll taxes as a prerequisite to voting. The South, anxious to discard the old traits of sectionalism, can be counted upon to make revisions of its antiquated restrictions on voting.

Housekeeping Aid By WPA Is Sought

Need of a free-housekeeping-aid project for the District, by which WPA workers would care for the homes of indigent families when the woman of the house is incapacitated, was presented to a group of women yesterday at a luncheon at the Y. W. C. A.

Mrs. Prentiss Wilson outlined the projected service; Mrs. Mary Steele, of the District WPA, told what contributions the WPA could make, and Miss Anna Marie Driscoll, WPA consultant, related how such projects work elsewhere.

Special guest at the luncheon was Dr. J. Bay Jacobs, chief of the maternity service of the District Health Department. Mrs. Lester Buchanan presided.

The Real Issue

By Barnet Nover.

Mussolini And The League.

ITALY HAS BEEN on unfriendly terms with the League of Nations ever since the Ethiopian question first arose at Geneva in 1935 and for the past 18 months has not even bothered to be represented at League meetings.

But to understand the real significance of Italy's threatened withdrawal from the League it is necessary to recall that the Fascist government's dislike of the Geneva organization antedates the Ethiopian crisis by many years. It goes back, in fact, to that October day in 1922 when Benito Mussolini took over the reins of government at Rome and prepared to make himself the dictator he has since become.

Once the Fascist regime was firmly established in Italy it was certain that sooner or later it would come into conflict with the League. Not only was the League, as was revealed in the days when he bombarded Corfu in 1923, a potential barrier to Mussolini's expansionist ambitions but the League's philosophy of international relations was diametrically opposed to the Machiavellian attitude of the Duce.

• • • •

THE LEAGUE COVENANT rests on the concept that peace is a good, that the nations of the world want peace and that they can achieve it by banding together against those who at some time or other might seek to break the peace.

It is a truism that the overwhelming majority of the inhabitants of the world want peace. Between 1914 and 1918 they were given a post-graduate course in the horrors and destructiveness of war and that lesson has been thoroughly learned in every land where freedom of speech and the press obtains.

But this circumstance has not prevented war from occurring in the Far East in 1931 and 1932, in Ethiopia in 1935 and 1936, in Spain last year and now again in the Far East. On the contrary it can be argued that the peace-mindedness of the great majority of nations of the world made these wars possible by inhibiting action of sufficient scope and force to deter the aggressor or stop him in his tracks. For always there was the haunting fear that such action, if drastic enough, might lead to war.

THE FASCIST nations deny that peace is a good in itself. Mussolini's rapture over "beautiful cannon" and his scornful references to the folly of "eternal peace" reflect the state of mind not only of his own regimented Black Shirts but also of Hitler's Brown Shirts and the Japanese militarists.

Practically from the beginning of his tenure as dictator, Mussolini poured vials of abuse on the League of Nations which sought by establishing certain rules of conduct among nations to transform the international anarchy of the past into a constructive peace system. Nonetheless, after the Corfu episode which foreshadowed his actions 12 years later in Ethiopia, Mussolini allowed Italy to remain in the League and actively to participate in its labors.

This was less inconsistent than it seems. Italy was during these years between the bombardment of Corfu and the invasion of Ethiopia not prepared to indulge in large-scale imperialistic adventures. The League was a growing and prospering institution to which it was advantageous to belong. And as a permanent member of the Council, Italy had a place on the League's directive body. And, furthermore, even as a peace agency the League had its uses for Italy, for it served as a possible barrier to German ambitions.

• • • •

BUT IF ITALY was during these years married to the League she was never in love with it and the latent antagonism toward Geneva flared into open hostility when the League sought to restrain Italy from going ahead with her Ethiopian adventure. At that moment the international rules laid down by the League and accepted by Italy became galling to the Fascist regime as, previously, they had proved irksome to Japan.

In the struggle that ensued Italy triumphed over the League. Despite sanctions, Italy conquered Ethiopia and ultimately sanctions were called off. Nonetheless the League continued to remain true to its own beliefs, at least to the extent of refusing to recognize the Ethiopian conquest.

There were and are League nations which favor washing the Ethiopian slate clean by recognizing Haile Selassie's former domain as part of the Italian empire. They have argued that there is no use in blinking the reality that Ethiopia as an independent nation has disappeared. But thus far these nations have been overruled for fear that by recognizing Ethiopia as Italian a crime would be compounded and an evil precedent set that might plague and bedevil the League and its members in days to come.

• • • •

POSSIBLY THE THREAT of Italian withdrawal (a notice to resign does not became operative for two years) might hasten the move to refuse recognition to Ethiopia as a League member and regard it henceforth as Italian.

Whether this would satisfy Mussolini and persuade him to keep Italy in the League is by no means certain, however. That would depend entirely on whether, in his opinion, the League could be used as an instrument for the furtherance of Italian ambitions or, whether, by remaining in the League, he could block any action against Italy.

The League with which the Duce perhaps would work is a far cry from the League erected by Woodrow Wilson. But that other League still has so many partisians in the democracies of Europe that it is doubtful if the League could be changed to suit Mussolini's desires.

Italy's contemplated action regarding the League reveals anew the fact that two worlds are in conflict. On the one hand are the peace-loving nations of the world who believe in the rule of law among nations. Together they are tremendously powerful. But disunity has been the rule among them. And it is this disunity which the Fascist powers and Japan seek to capitalize by combining together. Italy's threat to withdraw from the League would seem, from this angle, to be the latest manifestation of "have-not" solidarity.

"Christmas Spirit Is Out"—Salesgirl of Toy Soldiers.

THE FAT MAN loomed mountainously above the keyboard of the child's piano. As his pudgy fingers poked at the keys the crowd moved closer; ears cocked critically.

Everybody was very intent, because all the shoppers could see that the fat man was trying to play "Three Blind Mice." And every time he got past the "see how they run" part of the tune, something went flat.

McCARTHY.

A rather nervous lady standing behind him prepared to help him out, but every time her hand moved toward the little piano on the toy counter she lost courage. It was, after all, the fat man's discovery. The nervous lady could go over and watch the electric trains if she wished, but the fat man had first claim to the piano.

Sweat began to streak the fat man's face, and his lips pursed determinedly. "Three Blind Mice"—he picked out the tune very cautiously. "See how they run," followed and the audience of shoppers stiffened for the crisis. "They all ran after the farmer's wife," played the fat man. But again he went sour on the "They" note.

The last failure was just too much for the nervous lady. She reached over the fat man's shoulder and punched a key higher. "They all ran after the farmer's wife," she hummed. And the fat man smiled acknowledgment and finished out the tune while everybody applauded. But then somebody started to chuckle and the crowd broke up. And everybody looked a little sheepish.

THE KIDS MAY be taking these department store toylands in their stride this year, but the grown-ups are forgetting themselves and having the time of their lives.

Honest, they're amazing places. They aren't like the ones we had when we were kids. They aren't just stuffed with ordinary things like baseballs, and bicycles. Some of the gadgets they're featuring are downright colossal.

They've got a roller-coaster set that winds itself as it runs. Every time the little car sweeps down an incline the rough surface between the rails scrapes against a cog wheel and winds the car up to take it across the level stretches.

Then for about $3 you can get a model "automobile and trailer" set. And the trailer is equipped with a gadget which plays real music. They've also got musical rocking chairs for the nursery and the more the kids rock the more music is played.

Dad and mother are still having a big time at the electric train exhibit, but even the trains have a rival this year. They're featuring an electrically driven airplane which flys at the end of a swivel arm. And you can make it stunt, loop the loop and bring it down to a three-point landing.

• • • •

PERSONALLY, I'm a little worried about one trend. These scientific sets the various toylands are featuring seem a little too scholarly. They offer the kids an opportunity to look through a microscope at such fascinating things as "onion epidermis, reptile scales and diatomaceous earth."

That "diatomaceous earth" sort of worries me. I wonder if the modern kid can really pronounce that one. Then the G-men sets are pretty amazing too. They offer a microscope, hand-cuffs, and radial lie detectors—whatever they are.

Realism seems to be the big note in the toylands this year. And instead of miniature castles and things the children have never seen, they're featuring model barbecue stands and filling stations, complete with workable gasoline pumps.

The model grocery store is back on the counters, but it's been renovated. Besides shelves stocked with miniature packages labeled with the names of nationally known brands, they have a counter equipped with a dial telephone.

• • • •

THE ONE LONELY spot in local toylands is the counter devoted to toy soldiers. There, realism has overshot the mark. The wonder is that some parents are still blissfully buying the war toys for their children.

For the entertainment of the young idea, one store offered a set which included two fighting tanks, six infantrymen, two machine gunners and one barbed-wire entanglement. Another set featured a Red Cross ambulance, three barbed-wire entanglements and two stretcher bearers.

In case these more modest sets aren't sufficient for the delectation of the growing child, more extensive offerings priced at $15 and up include toy trenches, bomb-proof Red Cross shelters, nurses and even wounded soldiers.

This year those counters aren't drawing the customers, but the salesgirl at one department store told me that they still sell a good many of the war game sets.

She told me that most of the toy soldiers on sale were made in either Great Britain or Germany. Some, particularly the less expensive ones, were the product of Japan.

"You know," she said, "I'm about the only girl up here that's not enjoying this Christmas spirit. In the first place it sort of gets me to see the parents buying model trenches and barbed-wire entanglements, never stopping to think that the kid they're buying them for may end up in the real thing some day.

"Here's a nice little model," she said. "We had to take this one off the counter." The lead model depicted two soldiers carrying a third from the battlefield, in a stretcher.

"And the worst part of this job," the young lady said, "is that at least once a day, some patron comes over and bawls me out for selling these toys."

And with that she turned back to wait on a lady who was interested in the "machine gunner-barbed-wire entanglement" set.

RFC Accused Of Rail Loan to Help New Deal

St. Paul Road Received $3,500,000; Failed 6 Months Later.

By the Associated Press.

Senate investigators sought to show yesterday that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation granted financial assistance to the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad in 1934 partly because the Administration's recovery program might otherwise have suffered a setback.

The St. Paul received a $3,500,000 loan from the RFC on December 31, 1934, to meet interest payments due early in the following year, testimony showed, and six months later went into bankruptcy.

Directors of the road, who testified before the Senate railroad finance committee, declared it was unfair for the investigators to draw the inference that they expected bankruptcy despite the RFC aid. The loan, they said, was intended to avert bankruptcy.

Loan Called Necessary.

Mortimer N. Buckner, chairman of the New York Trust Co.; Frederick H. Ecker, chairman of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co.; and Robert T. Swaine, New York bank and railroad lawyer, were the directors who testified.

Swaine said the loan was necessary to prevent bankruptcy; but added the directors felt if sufficient cash were obtained to tide the road over for six months, there might be enough "general improvement" in that period to enable it to remain solvent.

The investigators put in the record evidence that W. W. K. Sparrow, vice president in charge of finance, and Howland S. Davis, a director, had expressed doubt about advisability of borrowing the Government money.

Cites Jones' Opinion.

The committee record showed that in a letter to H. A. Scandrett, its president, in October, 1934, Ecker reported:

"Confidentially, I have talked with Mr. Jones regarding what he is seeking to do in the direction of aiding the railroad situation in general. He was frank in saying he felt it would be in the public interest to have the Milwaukee avoid receivership at this time.

"It is of particular interest to note that he was not so much concerned about the collateral which presently may be available to the railroad. Quite definitely, it is his desire to prevent the receivership and to be helpful at this time."

Buckner told the committee he saw no reason for the R. F. C. to continue making loans, that "the R. F. C. has been doing an emergency business, and I think today it is more or less over."

Capital Squirrels To Share in More Abundant Living

Washington squirrels came in yesterday for a share of the more abundant life.

Traditionally free and easy with parks, squares and circles here and beneficiaries of big-hearted citizens, some of them are now to become wards of the National Park Service. The service has decided to build 60 new squirrel houses on the White House grounds, the Mall and elsewhere. And that's not all.

Peanuts will be furnished free by the Park Service.

Roosevelt Afraid Garner Killed His 'Old Friend Bessie'

By the Associated Press.

What was that critter Vice President Garner shot on a Pennsylvania deer-hunting trip?

President Roosevelt hinted it was a friendly pet of a hunting camp that answered to a whistle and ate out of your hand. "My old friend Bessie," was the way the President referred to the victim in a letter to Garner marked "private but not too confidential." Senator Guffey (Democrat), Pennsylvania, who organized the Garner hunting expedition last week, made the correspondence public yesterday.

The first assumption on Capitol Hill was that the President had in mind a cow—frequently the victim of a huntsman's error. Guffey finally said this assumption was wrong, that the Bessie he knew was a tame doe.

Garner's "game" was served up to a party of 24 senatorial and diplomatic guests Thursday night. Mr. Roosevelt's letter added:

"It makes me feel so chokey when I think of her untimely demise that I do not think that I could attend the funeral service tonight even if I had been invited. I hope that all of you enjoy the wake."

U. S. Authority On Road Safety Urged in House

Rep. Kennedy Seeks Federal Co-ordination of State and National Efforts.

Establishment of a Federal Highway Safety Authority as a means of curbing traffic accidents through co-ordination of effort was proposed yesterday by Representative Kennedy (Democrat), of Maryland, a member of the House District Committee.

Kennedy, in a speech on the floor, cited the high traffic accident record in the District as evidence of the need for such legislation.

The President would appoint representatives of the Federal Government and of national organizations interested in motor traffic to the authority.

One of its major duties would be to co-ordinate activities of the Federal and State governments in highway safety, including the gathering of accident statistics, and to promote the enactment by the States of uniform motor vehicle laws and regulations.

"Here, in the District, which looks to Congress for its government, 96 persons have been killed in motor vehicle accidents so far this year," Kennedy said. This is five more than in 1936 despite all we have tried to do.

"I emphasize the word "tried" because we really have done very little. The injury list has climbed even faster than the death toll.

"In 1936 there were 3,872 injuries up to December 10 in traffic accidents, and this year there have been 4,340. This is an increase of 12 per cent."

Landon Spurns Candidacy for Election in '40

Hints Hoover Should Do Likewise to Clarify Political Picture.

Roosevelt had expressed the belief that the Kansan "had the best of it" in not being President.

The former Kansas Governor said that in reply to Mr. Roosevelt's remark he related to him a story of two strangers who visited him recently while he was currying his horse in a barn.

One of the men asked if he was enjoying what he was doing and Landon replied: "Yep." The other suggested Landon was having a better time "than if you had got that job you were after last fall."

He agreed with his second questioner and added to newspapermen: "If I had gotten that job I wouldn't have been able to clean my horse."

Also Visits Capitol.

Landon, who came here for tonight's Gridiron dinner, also visited Capitol Hill, where he was the guest of Senator Arthur Capper (Republican), of Kansas, at a luncheon. Present also were the Kansas delegation in Congress, Republican National Committee Chairman John Hamilton, Roy Roberts, managing editor of the Kansas City Star, and several of the newspapermen who accompanied the Republican nominee in his campaign last year.

This was after his renunciation earlier of 1940 Presidential ambitions, when he laughed and joked with newsmen. He noted with assumed ruefulness that "it looks as if everyone in the gang except myself has a job in Washington." There were two interruptions: One, when the White House called, inviting him to visit the President later in the day, and a second when Frank Knox, Republican Vice Presidential candidate last year, strode into the room and greeted Landon.

Appeared Relieved.

Then after more quips and banter, a question as to whether Landon wanted to "take another whirl" at the Republican nomination brought serious consideration. After hesitating for a moment, Landon responded as though the question had been anticipated and as though he felt relieved at the answer he was making.

"It is presumptuous to decline something that has not been offered to one," he said. "A short time ago, I would not have answered this question. However, recent developments have convinced me that my acts as a citizen, as the 1936 Republican candidate, frequently have been misconstrued.

"For that reason and because personalities frequently confuse the clear-cut consideration of problems in politics, I am glad to answer the question without any equivocation whatsoever.

"I have not had any intention of being a candidate in 1940 and "in order that my position may be perfectly clear, will not accept the nomination in the remote contingency that the Republican national convention should offer it to me.

"I say this with full regard and appreciation of that high honor and feel it incumbent upon me to take this position in the spirit of keeping faith with the millions who have trusted me with their confidence."

There followed Landon's statement concerning a "suspected" candidate's inability to render what he considered a proper service to the party.

"Have You $12.50?"

By
William Lyon Phelps

Beautiful Edition Of Audubon.

GENTLE READER, have you got twelve dollars and a half ($12.50)? You have? Well, isn't that remarkable!

I will tell you exactly what to do with it. No, I am not an agent for any charity. I give what I can, but I absolutely refuse to tell anybody else what he ought to give.

Yes, I know, unless there were people to do that, all organized and unorganized charities would suffer; but the moment I ask anybody to give anything (I can ask them in the mass but not individually) I feel so sorry for him and so ashamed of myself that I am the world's worst collector. It often ends by my lending something to the proposed victim.

• • • •

LET US RETURN to that $12.50. Buy with it "The Birds of America," by John James Audubon, with an introduction and descriptive text by William Vogt, published this month by the Macmillan Co., New York.

This is a stunning, magnificent, folio volume, about 2 inches thick, with about a million (very round numbers) full-page colored pictures! There really are 500 colored plates. The first 435 were published by Audubon in London over one hundred years ago.

• • • •

THE PRICE is amazingly cheap for the book. And what a Christmas present! What delight this will give to your family and friends! The only trouble being that, when you have bought this book to give it away, you will be unable to part with it and will have to buy another. Twenty-five dollars for two copies, one for you and one for her.

This great book of birds is the Aurora Borealis, the Rainbow, the Comet, the what you will in the literary firmament of December.

Ex-New Dealer And Big Broker Named to SEC

Jerome Frank Appointed With John W. Hanes, N. Y. Exchange Member.

By the Associated Press.

A former New Deal official and a New York Stock Exchange member who subscribes to the Administration's demand for stock market reorganization received appointments to the Securities and Exchange Commission yesterday.

President Roosevelt appointed, subject to the Senate's approval, these men to fill existing commission vacancies:

John W. Hanes, senior partner of the brokerage firm of Chas. D. Barney & Co. and a leader of "liberal" opinion in Wall street.

Jerome N. Frank, New York corporation lawyer, who had a reputation for "liberalism" during previous service in important Administration posts.

Announcing in New York he would accept commission membership as "an opportunity for a real public service," Hanes said he heartily subscribed to the recent statement of William O. Douglas, commission chairman, that the New York exchange must throw additional safeguards about trading or face more drastic regulation.

The exchange took steps during the day to examine its own organization. Charles R. Gay, president, announced appointment of a committee to consider increasing the number of paid exchange officers.

Among the nine committee members listed by Gay were three stock exchange members, partners of exchange firms, businessmen, an editor and a lawyer.

One was Adolph A. Berle, jr., a member of President Roosevelt's "original brain trust." He is a lawyer and former city chamberlain of New York.

Other members were:

Trowbridge Callaway, of Callaway, Fish & Co., a stock exchange firm, and former president of the Investment Bankers Association of America; John A. Coleman, an exchange member; Carle C. Conway, chairman of Continental Can Co.; Maurice Farrell, of F. S. Smithers & Co., a governor of the Exchange; Kenneth C. Hogate, president of the financial news firm of Dow, Jones & Co.; William McC. Martin, jr., governor of the exchange and a member of the firm of A. G. Edwards & Sons, St. Louis; Thomas H. McInnerney, president of National Dairy Products Corporation; John W. Prentiss, senior partner of the exchange firm of Hornblower & Weeks and also a former I. B. A. president and once head of the Association of Stock Exchange Firms.

Discussing his appointment, Hanes said:

"Though a Wall street man, I was previously in the manufacturing business and have always thought of Wall street in terms of its importance to business. For that reason, I heartily subscribe to the recent statement of Chairman William O. Douglas on the need for reorganization of the New York Stock Exchange, in order that it may assume a greater public responsibility."

Hanes added that he was particularly happy "to serve the public interest at a time when the solution of that problem and the problem of capital markets is of such pressing importance."

Mrs. Laura Curtis Files Divorce Suit

Citing a voluntary separation in 1931 as the basis for her request, Mrs. Laura M. Curtis, Washington and New York society and sportswoman, yesterday in District Court filed suit for absolute divorce from her lawyer-husband, James Freeman Curtis, of New York.

Stating there had been a satisfactory property settlement and that she wanted no alimony, Mrs. Curtis, in her petition, asked for the custody of two minor children—Frazier Curtis, 19, and Pauline Curtis, 16. There are two adult children, James F. Curtis, jr., and Mrs. George H. Bostwick, wife of the polo player.

Mrs. Curtis obtained a divorce in Paris in 1924, and 13 months later remarried her husband here. Soon after that she opened the fashionable 1925 F Street Club and has engaged in numerous other enterprises. The Curtis marriage more than a quarter of a century ago was one of the season's social highlights.

Airline Seeks 100-Passenger Ocean Planes

Pan American Asks Bids on 5,000-Mile Craft for Atlantic Route.

Construction bids for several 100-passenger airplanes to be used in transocean service have been sought from eight manufacturers, Pan-American Airways revealed last night.

Col. Charles A. Lindbergh is chairman of Pan American's technical committee, which must pass on the specifications.

The new planes would have stateroom accommodations for 100 passengers and a crew of 16. Their cruising speed would be not less than 200 miles an hour and they would have a range of 5,000 miles or more.

The planes' payload capacity would be 25,000 pounds. There would be cargo compartments for mail, baggage and express, "permitting full use of all payload capacity not utilized by passengers."

"Special consideration will be given," the letter to the manufacturers said, "to designs which incorporate features permitting operation of airplanes at 20,000 feet altitude or higher with interior cabin pressures equivalent to 8,000 feet altitude.

The eight aircraft manufacturers were directed to submit their proposals to Col. Lindbergh.

Prices were asked for lots of three, six and 12 planes.

Plans of British, French and German airlines threaten "the hard-earned technical leadership of American transportation on the world's most important trade route—the transatlantic," Pan American explained in a subsidiary statement, declaring this rivalry "made imperative the immediate concentration of the American aircraft industry upon development of greatly advanced, practical, long-range transoceanic aircraft, at the earliest possible date."

Aircraft available now will carry a payload of 12,500 pounds for 2,500 miles, half the load and half the distance which the projected ships would handle, the company said.

Bar Charges Bank Illegally Practices Law

Ruling Sought on Limits of Legal Advice by Layman or Corporation.

Seeking to obtain a definite ruling from District Court outlining the limits a corporation or a layman must observe in giving legal advice, a special committee of the District Bar Association and the American Security & Trust Co. yesterday went before Justice Jennings Bailey.

Represented by Attorneys Leo A. Rover, former United States attorney, and Richard L. Merrick, the association asked that the bank be held in contempt of court for the alleged unauthorized practice of law, a charge that was denied by G. Bowdoin Craighill, attorney for the company.

While admitting there were many legal questions a trust company might properly decide, Rover contended the bank's business before the District Court was the chief item of interest of the association. It was alleged by Rover that the bank had given legal advice and handled probate matters through salaried employes, had drawn up trust agreements and had advertised it possessed intimate knowledge of laws concerning taxes and trusts and estates.

Craighill denied the company practiced law. He said it retained independent counsel in all contested matters. He stated the company would have the right, if it wished, to be represented by its own counsel. He pictured the bank as rendering excellent service to the public in its trust campacity.

Indicating the hearing would last several days, Rover said he wished to inquire in more than 30 estate cases the trust company has been connected with recently.

2 Held for Killing Farmer, Shooting Wife in Robbery

Crete, Ill., Dec. 10 (AP).—Two men named by a farmwife as the robbers who killed her husband and then shot her in an attempt to cover their identities were seized today. They were identified as John Jelliga, 33, and Mike Munjas, 45.

Mrs. Hulda Pansa, 38, told the story of the slaying after crawling and staggering a half mile over a snowswept road in near zero weather. Her husband, Edward Pansa, 45, was shot to death last night as he lay on a sofa in his home with hands bound, pleading for his life. The robbers then walked to the bedroom into which they had pushed Mrs. Pansa, shot her in the head and left her for dead.

The farmwife said she heard her husband pleading for his life as she crouched in her bedroom. One of the robbers said:

"We've got to bump you off. You know who we are." She said the men took $77.

Poison Flavorings Are Seized by U. S.

Seizure of a "considerable" quantity of flavoring extracts containing diethylene glycol, the poisonous solvent in elixir of sulfanilamide recently, was announced yesterday by the Food and Drug Administration. Several deaths from using the extracts were reported in Canada. Seizures were made in and near Denver, Kansas City, Baltimore, Pittsburgh and Cleveland. Diethylene glycol, it was explained, is used as a substitute for glycerin, a use not entirely new.

Dr. P. B. Dunbar, assistant chief of the administration, said manufacturers have agreed to help take such extracts off the market. He said no attempt would be made to collect from homes extracts containing the poison, since not enough is used in extracts and flavoring to cause ill effects unless taken in large quantities as a beverage.

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

There's one small but sturdy hotel in downtown Washington which is reputed to reap a goodly share of its revenue from renting its rooms to sporty statesmen—Senators and such—who like to get away for an evening of poker occasionally.

Poker is a sort of point of honor with many members; some play the game who'd be better off curled up with a good book.

Elderly statesmen in the Capital are atwitter at the rumor that an intrepid National Geographic expedition has brought back samples of a Chinese plant, the Lohon, which elderly gentlemen of Kwansi Province think contributes to virility.

• • • •

Newspapermen have suggested that first samples be added unobtrusively to vegetable soup at the restaurants patronized by the elder statesmen . . . But some of the younger Members on the Hill contend that the Press Club salads are the right place for the initial experiments.

"—an imported Santa Claus"

One of my scouts at the State Department telephones that the Nazi demand for more Berlin control of German minorities in Czechoslovakia is just an overture, a prelude to bigger things.

"If they put that one over," he prophesies, "the next step will be repatriation of the German minorities in Milwaukee, St. Louis and the Yorkville section of New York."

• • • •

John L. Lewis' CIO is remodeling the old University Club, at 15th and I streets, as its Washington headquarters . . . A sort of balcony seems to have budded above the front door . . . It would be a magnificent setting, say the old settlers in the neighborhood, for John to address a big throng in McPherson Square.

PAJAMA PORTRAITS—V.

In less than a month at the Capital, Bruce Barton has put himself across handsomely and ranks tentatively as one of the topflight Congressmen.

His first important speech, at a Press Club luncheon, witty and middle-of-the-road, disarmed the scribes, who are apt to be a little leary of a man they think of as a high-pressure advertising smoothie.

Boyish and pleasant-mannered, ruddy and erect, he is often the center of a group in the bullpen behind the House chamber where the lawmakers relax. Often he strolls over to the Senate to listen to the more Jovian oratory there.

He gets razzed a little about his book on the Bible—"The Book No Barton Knows."

• • • •

POTOMAC FOLDEROL: At ten paces these Senators look enough alike to fool some of their constituents: Gillette and Shipstead; Gerry and Schwellenbach; Cabot Lodge and Josh Lee.

If all the Army officers and enlisted men around Washington were to wear their uniforms downtown to the movies instead of civvies several embassies would promptly cable their foreign offices to stop talking snottily about us democracies. The town would have the menacing appearance of an armed camp.

"—poker as a point of honor"

One cultured and wealthy Washington family is afraid, in a genteel tory way, that its children may grow up thinking Uncle Sam and Santa Claus are the same person.

So they are scheming, they confide in friends, to invite Bernard Shaw to come over and play streamlined Santa without a makeup.

• • • •

In a recent speech Bill Douglas, the sandy-haired, likable boogeyman of Wall street who runs the SEC, used the word "realistic" or its variations seven times . . . Enough to send the shivers down the back of a young Harvard customer's man who wants to grow up to be a wolf-of-Wall-Street.

• • • •

Washington is a fat town . . . It has seldom had a real taste of depression or recession or whatever you want to call an attack of business dyspepsia . . . Pay checks keep coming and business continues better than elsewhere, whether in 1932 or 1937.

One Government official thought the current "recession" talk was a lot of hooey until his wife came back from New York with the report that all the shopkeepers she saw along Madison and Fifth avenues were woebegone, and mink coats had dropped from $1,250 to $747 for the cheaper varieties . . . Now he's hot to give business a shot in the arm.

Antiwar Bill Will Get Hearing by House Body

By the Associated Press.

The House Judiciary Committee arranged yesterday to hold hearings Monday on a measure by Representative Ludlow (Democrat), of Indiana, to amend the Constitution to forbid a declaration of war unless the people approve such a step in a national referendum.

Committee members said they wanted to obtain the views of the State Department and Administration on the legislation.

Gang Raiders Defy Court, 'Won't Talk'

Coroner's Jury Holds Police Killed Williams in Line of Duty.

Robbers' Prospective Victim, Slot Machine Man, Tells Dangers.

By Howard F. Wentworth.

A coroner's jury deliberated less than ten minutes yesterday to decide that Carlton G. (Cotty) Williams, slain bandit chief, was killed by detectives "defending their lives in line of duty," after gangland's code sealed the lips of principal witnesses.

Repeated attempts by prosecutors to reveal events leading to Sunday night's gun battle in Southeast Washington were met by rebuffs from prisoners called to tell of a plot to rob a safe at 3811 Suitland road.

From Benjamin Franklin Sewell, colored "mystery" mobster, Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald drew the admission that he was a drug addict and could not testify "because of his condition." Sewell, identified by Detective Sergt. Joseph Shimon as a member of the robbery gang, admitted he was addicted to drugs and had been deprived of them since his arrest several days ago. He refused to answer further questions on advice of his counsel, Charles E. Ford.

Tabler Clings to Silence.

But the only answer Dr. MacDonald obtained from John Marshall Tabler, another gang suspect, was "I won't talk."

Tabler, who surrendered after Williams was killed "to avoid being shot," was called to the witness stand and sworn to tell the truth. Hardly had Tabler taken the oath, however, when he turned to the jury and said:

"I'm not answering any questions—see."

"What is your name?" asked Dr. MacDonald.

"I ain't answering that," was the surly reply. "One question leads to another."

"Then you are standing on your constitutional rights?"

"I dunno—I'm not going to answer questions."

"Calling your attention to the night of Sunday, December 5," continued Dr. MacDonald, "were you in the vicinity of Suitland road and Camden street southeast?"

Tabler turned his back on the coroner and remained silent. A moment later he was remanded to the custody of police.

After Williams was killed, police entered the Suitland road house and said they found a safe and large oval table in a second floor room. It was this safe that the Williams gang planned to rob, according to testimony.

Charles E. Nelson, 1240 Oates street northeast, who said he operated a string of slot machines in Prince Georges County (Md.), admitted he owned the house and leased portions of it to roomers. He told the jury that $1,305 was in the safe Sunday night.

Shimon Tells of Killing.

"If you don't live in the house, why do you maintain that one second-floor room?" asked Assistant Corporation Counsel J. W. Lauderdale.

"Because I want to."

"Is there any reason why you couldn't keep that safe at home?"

"There is—plenty," he retorted. "There is a bunch of holdup men who would knock you off continually hanging around my place and it isn't safe."

At this point, Assistant United States Attorney George McNeil interrupted to inquire:

"What do you use the big table in that room for?"

"What do you think?" responded Nelson.

"I'm asking you," said McNeil.

"To eat off from, I guess," mumbled Nelson.

Detective Sergt. Joseph Shimon, whose work over an 8-months period resulted in the police trap, told how Williams was killed.

Six detectives (including himself), Capt. Ira E. Keck, Lieut. Clement P. Cox and Detective Sergents Jake Wolf, Hugh Robey and Michael J. Mahany, said Shimon, were "planted" at the scene.

From their positions in the underbrush, the officers watched as two automobiles cruised past the house several times. One of them finally stopped and two men got out. One man and was promptly riddled with house and the other started through the bushes toward the policemen.

Williams Fired Two Shots.

Lieut. Cox jumped from his hiding place and ordered the man to "Stop, we are officers!" Instead of stopping, however, the man turned and started to run. A moment later he wheeled around and drew a gun. The man, later identified as Williams, fired two shots at the policeman and was promtply riddled with bullets. Nine shots struck him in the abdomen and thigh.

Shimon's story was repeated by the other officers. It was the third night the "trap" had been maintained. Under cross-examination by Attorney Ford, Shimon said he recognozed Sewell, seated by the driver as the car sped away.

The gang's car, punctured with bullet holes, was found later in a garage near Logan circle. The license numbers were listed in the name of James Robert Steele, said Lieut. Cox, and Steele is now being sought.

Paul Nelson, brother of the house owner, admitted he "fingered" the job. He was instructed by Williams, Paul Nelson said, to take a man named "Marshall" to Suitland road and point out the second floor room where the safe was kept. He denied that "Marshall was John Marshall Tabler.

All those now held in connection with the robbery plot will remain in police custody "until everything is cleared up," police announced.

District WPA Will Hire 850 By January 1

Applicants to Be Taken From Certified List of Agency.

Eight hundred and fifty additional persons will be placed on District WPA projects before January 1, it was announced yesterday by Commissioner George E. Allen.

Permission for the increase was given by Frank Dryden, regional WPA director, of Philadelphia.

This move, Commissioner Allen said, is in line with the recent Government plan to place more persons on projects to offset the business recession.

Applicants will be taken from the WPA certified list. None of the jobs, Commissioner Allen said, would be on the administrative pay roll, but the new employes would be paid the security wage.

Plans called for the hiring of 200 persons by next week. Many of the persons will be taken from Federal WPA projects which will terminate by the first of the year. It was estimated that about 800 men and women now working on Federal projects will have to be absorbed by the District.

Otto Cass, deputy WPA administrator for the District, stated that an appeal would be made to the Federal WPA to provide an increase in the District quota to take care of those seeking jobs with the District WPA.

Meanwhile Federal relief grants to the States and increase of WPA rolls were requested of President Roosevelt yesterday by David Lasser, head of the Workers of Alliance of America, union of WPA workers and unemployed.

Rise of unemployment figures was attributed by Lasser to "the strike of the reactionaries in an attempt to blackjack the Government into repeal of liberal legislation and in an attempt to destroy the rapidly rising labor movement."

Symphony Scores In Canadian Tour

The National Symphony Orchestra returned yesterday after completing the first major tour of the season, covering more than 2,500 miles in New England and Canada. C. C. Cappel, the manager, called it the most successful tour in the orchestra's history. At 13 concerts in 11 cities the orchestra drew capacity audineces, and in Toronto, Hamilton and Ottawa, an especially warm welcome was reported. Tomorrow at 4 p.m. in Constitution Hall, Ruggiero Ricci, 17-year-old violinist, will be soloist and Antal Dorati, Hungarian conductor, will be guest leader in an all-Beethoven program.

D. C. Tax Group Fails To Rech Agreement

Recommendation to Congress of a new tax program for the District was postponed again yesterday after a two-hour session of the Commissioners with the joint committee of officials and citizens faied to end an agreement. Another joint conference was slated for next Friday.

During the past week, Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen announced the opinions he had heard favored a sales tax for the District.

Parran Urges War Upon Ills Of Poor Class

Welfare Association Hears Leaders on Current Social Problems.

Demanding a national war against disease scourges of the lower income groups, Dr. Thomas Parran, jr., surgeeon general, declared at a dinner of the American Public Welfare Association last night that "public health may be a great force in the United States; but, like Christianity, it hasn't yet been tried."

Members of the association, meeting at the Wardman Park Hotel, heard Representative H. Jerry Voorhis (Democrat), of California, indicate that equitable distribution of purchasing power is more important for the general welfare than a balanced Federal budget.

A plea for more extended care for the health of mothers and infants was voiced by Katharine Lenroot, chief of the United States Children's Bureau, while Aubrey Williams, deputy administrator of the WPA, referred to the dole as a "disgraceful" method of meeting unemployment needs.

J. Douglas Brown, of Princeton University, chairman of the Social Security Board's advisory council, spoke briefly on the work of the council.

A letter from President Roosevelt was read at the dinner by the chairman, Charles F. Ernst, who is president of the association and director of the Washington State Department of Social Security.

Many persons able to sustain themselves and therefore not eligible for relief find that they are financially "unprepared" in case of sickness, Dr. Parran asserted. "Yet public welfare officials tend to apply the yardstick of indigency, which is an "inadequate yardstick for medical need," he said.

Dr. Parran maintained that the medical and related professions can be integrated in a national program "without basic change in the system of medical practice."

Miss Lenroot asserted that of the 147,000 mothers and infants who died last year before or shortly after childbirth, half could have been saved.

Planning of natural, human and financial resources was advocated by Representative Voorhis. Declaring it "ridiculous to call planning the antithesis of freedom," Voorhis said that the exploitation of natural resources leads to monopoly prices for goods, "and it takes an awful lot of social work to make up for that."

Lecturer Shows Films of England

So slightly does change affect the scene in England that a guide book of 1906 proved to be good in most cases in 1936, Burton Holmes told members of the National Geographic Society last evening at Constitution Hall.

Holmes took his audience, by means of colored lantern slides and motion pictures, for a tour of England, Scotland and Wales.

He showed motion pictures of the investiture as Prince of Wales of the Present Duke of Windsor and of the Duke in his reign as Edward VIII.

Tuberculosis Plan Barred By D.C. Heads

Commisisoners Block Move to Treat Adults in Children's Ward.

Adult Section Jammed, Beds in Juvenile Unit Are Empty.

The District Commissioners ruled yesterday that the children's building at the Glen Dale Tuberculosis Sanatorium shall accept no adults and the adults' unit no children.

Their action, taken upon recommendation of Commissioner George E. Allen, was counter to the advice of Health Officer George C. Ruhland, the Health Department's tuberculosis advisory board and J. A. Myers, president of the National Tuberculosis Association.

Corporation Counsel Elwood H. Seal on Wednesday gave the Commissioners his opinion that it would be legal to install men and women sufferers in the juvenile ward, provided strict segregation within the 300-bed building was observed. Dr. Ruhland and his advisory board, in urging such a step be taken, because the white wards of the adult building are filled to capacity and the children's unit is nearly half empty, also stressed the importance of keeping grownups and youngsters apart.

"No Reason for Change."

"I am still old-fashioned enough to think that a children's building should be kept for them exclusively," Allen explained. "To do so is better for the child.

"The Commissioners don't profess to know medicine but nothing has been presented to us to show why there should be any change in the present policy of keeping adults and children in separate buildings."

Health Officer Ruhland, upon being informed by The Post of the District heads' decision, was amazed at their reversal of medical authorities, but he refrained from comment.

Dr. Myers Quoted.

He had submitted to the Commissioners a letter from Dr. Myers, in which the Minneapolis specialist said that "300 beds set aside for tuberculosis children is far too many for any city in the country."

Dr. William Charles White, former president of the District Tuberculosis Association, is chairman of the permanent advisory group, which indorsed Dr. Ruhland's plan to devote an isolated portion of the children's building to overflow cases from the adults' unit. Dr. James G. Townsend, new president, also is a member of the committee.

Dr. Daniel L. Finucane, assistant superintendent of the sanatorium, estimates that half of the 194 boys and girls in the institution are suffering from the childhood type—the kind which Dr. Myers believes does not require hospitalization.

City Forum Hears Labor Act Praised

The National Labor Relations Act was described as the most significant piece of legislation ever passed in the United States by Edwin S. Smith, NLRB member, in a speech last night before the Capital City Forum.

Smith warned an audience of 150 that the coming months will witness campaigns through Congress, press and the radio to amend the National Labor Relations Act and give employers an opportunity to halt the growth of organized labor.

This growth in the strength of American trade unionism by 4,000,000 new members he characterized as one of the most remarkable events in the history of the capitalist nations.

Hospital's Change To School Urged

Reaffirming a stand taken at a meeting last month, the Brightwood Citizens' Association last night adopted a resolution urging that the old Tuberculosis Hospital at Fourteenth and Upshur streets northwest be used for educational purposes, and not in any way as a hospital.

In its resolution, the association expressed itself particularly against using theb uilding as a Gallinger annex. Members declared that any extension to Gallinger should be constructed in its immediate vicinity.

Colored motion pictures of scenes in Washington and in nearby Maryland and Virginia were shown at the meeting by Miss Maud Proctor.

Two Appointed To Aid Survey For Gallinger

Hospital's Needs Discussed at Meeting Co-ordinating Health Efforts.

Gallinger Hospital's myriad problems — principally overcrowding, forced use of firetrap buildings and shortage of nurses, as outlined recently by The Post—formed the main topic of discussion yesterday at a co-ordination meeting incidental to the United States Public Health Service survey of District facilities.

At its conclusion, Health Officer George C. Ruhland announced that Miss Ashby Taylor will direct an investigation of Gallinger's nursing service. She is a member of the Children's Hospital nursing staff.

Dr. Ruhland also revealed that Dr. Sterling V. Mead will conduct a survey of the municipal institution's dental service and needs. Other departments of the Gallinger Hospital will be assigned to specialists yet to be appointed.

It is planned to have all activities undertaken by private investigators co-ordinated with the Federal study now being made by the public health service, under direction of Assistant Surgeon General Robert Olesen.

Present at the meeting yesterday in Dr. Ruhland's office were Dr. Sterling Ruffin, chairman of the special investigating committee named by the District Medical Society; Dr. William Charles White, chairman of the health department's tuberculosis advisory committee; Richard Mackenzie, who recently made a brief investigation of Gallinger for the budget bureau; Dr. Daniel Seckinger, assistant health officer, and Miss Taylor and Drs. Olesen and Mead.

Davison Cleared Of Hiding Assets In Second Trial

Emmett C. Davison, 59-year-old former Mayor of Alexandria, was acquitted by a Federal Court jury there late yesterday of charges he concealed assets in a bankruptcy proceeding.

It was Davison's second trial on two indictments charging perjury and concealment of assets growing out of his petition in bankruptcy filed in November, 1935. The jury failed to agree on the first trial last March.

Davison earlier in the day had told friends he was confident of acquittal.

His wife and daughter were in the courtroom during most of the day while the defense paraded a long list of character witnesses to the stand. Judge Luther B. Way charged the jury and attorneys made their final arguments.

Virginia's Governor-elect James H. Price, in a telegram, expressed "confidence" in the defendant's "uprightness."

Students Argue On Unicameral System at Meet

High School Pupils Make Harold Welch Head of G. W. Conference.

High school students, using like veterans all the tricks of "machine politics," yesterday elected Harold Welch, of McKinley High School, chairman of the two-day conference on merits of the unicameral system of legislation opening at George Washington University.

Amid cries of "sit down" occasioned by disputes over the count for chairman, Miss Georgia Lee Norris, Eastern High School, was elected secretary. She beat out Miss Betty White, of Central, who was recommended as a "good four-minute speaker."

Robert Hosford, of Western, and Robert Marshall, of Central, were the defeated candidates for chairman of the conference of 150 delegates from the District, Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia.

J. N. Norton, who in 1913 made the original proposal for a one-house system of legislation in his State, and who is now a member of the Nebraska house, the first unicameral house in the country, told the students that the system is more responsive to the will of the people, more representative, and more democratic than any other form of government.

Other advantages, he said, are that the unicameral legislature fixes responsibility, is more economical, leads to more careful consideration of each measure, and dispenses with the conference committee, which is a "third house" meeting in secret session.

John S. White, of the Maryland Legislature, contended that the bicameral system has worked successfully for 670 years, since the creation of the first English Parliament, and that it cannot be shown that there are reasons sufficient for changing it. Effectiveness of the legislature depends on the intelligence and character of the individual legislator, he said, and these qualities are not changed by putting them in one room instead of two.

The delegates held group sessions yesterday afternoon, and today in general session will adopt resolutions expressing majority views on the subject.

Senator Josh Lee, Oklahoma, will speak at a luncheon today at the Mayflower Hotel on "Streamlining Democracy." The department of public speaking of the university has sponsored the meetings.

William G. Dorsey, U. S. Printer, Dead

William G. Dorsey, 71, retired Government Printing Office linotype operator, died yesterday at his home, 222 Ninth street northeast.

Born in Winchester, Va., Mr. Dorsey had lived in Washington for 32 years. He retired from the Government Printing Office five years ago, after 15 years of service. Previously, he worked for a time as a linotype operator at The Post.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Martha Dorsey; two daughters, Mrs. Mary K. Welsh and Mrs. Virginia A. Kephart, and two sons, Bryan and William E. Dorsey, all of Washington. He also leaves a brother, Frank Dorsey, and two sisters, Miss Annie and Miss Fannie Dorsey, of Winchester, Va.

Funeral services will be held at Chahmber's undertaking establishment, 517 Eleventh street southeast, at 10 a. m. Monday. Burial will be in Winchester.

Waterfront Project Fund Assured Here

Channel Program Money to Be Included in 1939 Supply Bill.

Work Will Be Launched Next Spring by Army Engineers.

Assurance that funds for the improvement of Washington's waterfront would be included in the 1939 District supply bill came yesterday from Chairman Collins, of the House sub-committee on District appropriations, after he had inspected the Washington Channel and vicinity.

Collins indicated aproval of the plan under which War Department engineers will do the work as part of a national river-dredging and channel-deepening project authorized by Congress last year.

$68,000 to Be Sought.

An initial appropriation of $68,000 will be asked in the first deficiency appropriations bill, so that the work can get under way next spring. The Commissioners asked an additional $64,000 in their 1939 budget estimates, and it is understood the Budget Bureau has approved both requests.

Among the items in the waterfront project are a yacht basin, a new municipal wharf, a new harbor police and fire station, a new morgue and the widening of Water street. The total cost to the District will be $389,000.

As Collins prepared to make his last tour today in anticipation of budget hearings, which will be begn Monday, a demand that the District budget be held to a minimum in order to lower taxes came from Representative Kennedy (Democrat), Maryland.

Would Keep Down Budget.

Kennedy, who is chairman of the sub-committee of the House District Committee, which will pass on the District's new tax program, said he believed the 1939 budget should not exceed the $46,000,000 appropriated for the current year. The Budget Bureau has recommended a budget of $47,800,000.

Kennedy said he would suggest to Chairman Palmisano, of the House District Committee, that one of the members of the subcommittee be designated to sit in with the subcommittee on appropriations in order to get a proper background for the tax inquiry.

Would Raise Lump Sum.

On the other side of Capitol Hill, Senator Copeland (Democrat), of New York, stated that if Congress increased the local budget it should raise the Federal payment accordingly so as to relieve District taxpayers of any additional levies.

He also said he would favor "adequate" appropriations for Gallinger Hospital when the Senate sub-committee takes over the District supply bill.

Inspects Water Plant.

Collins also inspected the District water plant yesterday, but did not say whether improvements in the system would be authorized in the new supply bill.

The 1939 budget is understood to have provided for the starting of a reserve fund to finance improvements in the water system over a period of years. District officials proposed such a long-range program last year when they asked that the water rent reduction be eliminated.

Services Today For John Dawson

Funeral services for John Pelham Dawson, 67, employe of the Department of Agriculture for 44 years will be held this morning at the home, 64 M street, northwest. Requiem mass will follow in St. Aloysius' Church at 10 a.m., with burial in Mount Olivet Cemetery. Mr. Dawson died Wednesday.

The Curious Titter as Washington's Mentally Ill Stand 'Trial'

"Barbarous," "medieval" and "grossly unfair" are among the descriptives used by Dr. Winfred Overholser, superintendent of St. Elizabeths Hospital, Thursday "in speaking of the District's system of committing the sick of mind to that institution.

A reporter was assigned yesterday to check up on the psychiatrist's criticisms: That intimate matters pertaining to the patient are exposed in open court, that he must sit by as wives and husbands and sons tearfully testify to his behavior, that the whole thing is conducted much in the manner of a criminal trial.

The scene was Criminal Court No. 1. Justice Jesse C. Adkins was on the bench. The jurors were in their box, the prosecuting attorney from the Corporation Counsel's office was in his chair, nearly every courtroom seat was occupied and District Alienist Joseph L. Gilbert was on the stand "accusing" Mrs. L. B. of seeing visions of God and hearing threatening voices out of nowhere.

Dr. Gilbert stepped down and Mr. B. was called. He said he thought hospitalization would do his wife good. The prosecutor submitted the case to the jury. The clerk asked them if the "defendant" was of sound or unsound mind.

"Unsound," came the reply in unison. Mrs. B., accompanied by an attendant, was walked back into the anteroom where the mentally ill are herded to await their turn before the bar.

Next.

An attractive middle-aged woman. Dr. Gilbert says she has dementia praecox, paranoid type, just like Mrs. B. Her brother reluctantly describes her condition. The jury, did not hesitate long.

"Unsound."

An attache leads an elderly woman to a chair just inside the rail as her daughter is marched into the room. The mother is weeping. The crowd stares at her, then at the pathetic apparition seated near the jury box whom the prosector "accuses" of having dementia praecox of a more acute type than the other two.

She mumbles incoherently as testimony is given. Happily, the assistant corporation counsel spares the mother the ordeal of taking the stand. As the jury pronounces its "unsound," the girl cries:

"I have no body. I have no mind. I am a living corpse."

That causes some tittering in the rear of the courtroom. But there is restrained laughter a few cases later when a maniac depressive colored "defendent" demands to make a statement and, permission granted, categorically denies the charges lodged against him and winds up in a political harangue.

Black and white, young and old, male and female—all were represented in yesterday's array of "defendants," haled into court and subjected, along with their closest of kin, to the eager ears and eyes of the curious.

A patent attorney took the stand to testify his father, a depressive type, should be in St. Elizabeths. A beautiful young wife and mother listened expressionless as her husband, seated a few feet away, was described as being a victim of syphilis as well as mental disease.

Naturally, she was required to give not only her own name and address but the names of the couple's two children.

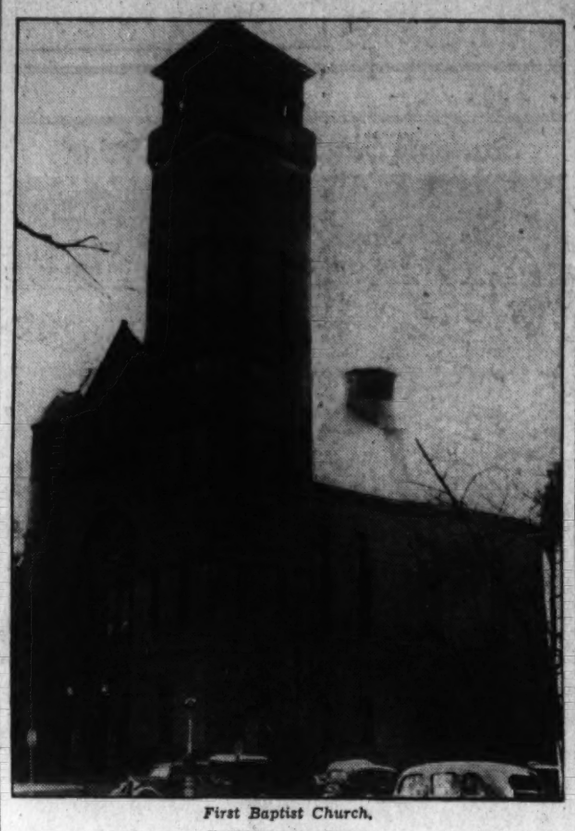
Historic Churches



First Baptist Church.

Church Formed Here in 1802 Is Mother of 200 in D. C. Area

First Baptist Organized by 6 Persons Meeting in Treasury; Grandfather of R. Walton Moore Preached First Sermon.

In March, 1802, six people met in the Treasury and organized a church which now is the mother and grandmother of nearly 500 Baptist churches in the Washington area. The membership of the First Baptist Church itself has grown from 6 to over 900, and the white and colored congregations which it has founded include well over 75,000 people.

The sermon at the organization meeting was preached by the Rev. Jeremiah Moore, grandfather of R. Walton Moore, counselor of the State Department. The first pastor, appointed in 1807, was the Rev. Obadiah Brown, who also was chief clerk of the Postoffice Department and a member of Andrew Jackson's "kitchen cabinet." Boarders in "Parson" Brown's fashionable E street residence included Amos Kendall, later Postmaster General and Representative Richard Johnson, later vice president under Van Buren.

The parson was one of the founders of Columbian College (later Columbian University, now George Washington University) and for many years the president of its board of trustees.

A few months after its organization, the church moved from the Treasury to a brick building at Nineteenth and I streets northwest. In 1833 this property was given to the colored Nineteenth and I Street Church, which still occupies it. (The Rev. W. H. Brooks, D. D., has been pastor of the latter church for 55 years.) The First Church erected a building on Tenth street which later was occupied by Ford's Theater. Hence, John Wilkes Booth fled from the theater down "Baptist Alley" after shooting Lincoln.

The church merged with the Fourth Baptist Church in 1859. In 1888 it dedicated the present building at Sixteenth and O streets. Evidence of its rapid growth is the fact that its membership has nearly doubled in the last three years.

The Rev. Edward Hughes Pruden, D. D., thirteenth pastor of the church, celebrates his first anniversary in its pulpit tomorrow. His predecessor, Dr. Rufus A. Weaver, is executive secretary of the Columbia Association of Baptist Churches.

Material Sense Deprecated in Science Lecture

Dr. DeLange Declares Faith That of 'One and Only God.'

Those who seek "harmony and health" must be willing "to refrain from a merely material sense of existence," declared Dr. Hendrick J. DeLange in a Christian Science lecture last night in the National Theatre.

Dr. DeLange, a member of the Board of Lectureship of The Mother Church, First Church of Christ, Scientist, Boston, was introduced by Bernard C. Duncan, first reader of First Church in Washington.

Aid to Happiness.

"It is our privilege to draw your attention to the fact that Christian Science may well be called the Science of the one and only God," declared Dr. DeLange. "Through this Science we learn, not merely to believe in God, but also to understand Him more intimately. This enables us to become definitely aware of what we really are, the divine purpose of our existence, and the happiness through practical usefulness this may mean for us.

"There is hardly a greater contrast imaginable between the theme under consideration and the spectacle offered to us by our modern world. The age, indeed, presents a greater difference of opinions and diversity of concepts than, perhaps, any other period of human history. A bewildering variety of views is prevalent in matters of government, ethics, religion, and almost every other important subject. At the same time, one has to register a growing desire for unity. The world of today, while teeming with controversies and conflicts, is thoroughly tired of the unrest and uncertainty produced by chaotic, unprincipled thinking.

Powers Changed.

"Those who wish to reap the fruits of harmony and health, both in behalf of themselves and humanity at large, must be willing to refrain from a merely material sense of existence. In fact, religion throughout the centuries has generally taught this necessity in order to find the joys and inner certainties of becoming better acquainted with the great originating power of all existence.

"Religious history shows that in the measure humanity has become mentally developed, this concept of creative power has changed, and the manner of worship accordingly. It is also seen how, conversely, the changed concept of Deity has had a marked influence upon the progress of individuals and peoples. Paganism with its countless gods goes hand in hand with gross materialism and low morality. When the concepts of the first great cause grew more noble and loving, simultaneously the worshipers proved to be of a higher type.

Congregationalists Plan Special Rites

The 317th anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims at Plymouth Rock will be observed in the Mount Pleasant Congregational Church tomorrow morning when Dr. Russell J. Clinchy, the minister, will preach his annual Forefathers' Day sermon on "The Pilgrims Speak to 1937."

The Puritans, of whom the Pilgrims were a part, established the Congregational form of church organization, with democratic control by individual members and churches, when they broke away from the edict of James I that all worship must be conducted within the state church.

This led to the voyage of the Pilgrims in the Mayflower in 1620 and the establishment of religious liberty upon the American continent. Dr. Clinchy's sermon will be based upon the interpretation of the Pilgrim message for our modern life.

First Congregational. The Rev. Howard Stone Anderson has chosen "Furs or Faith" as the title for his annual Forefathers' Day sermon at the First Congregational Church tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock. Mayflower descendants and patriotic groups have been invited to attend.

Siamese Envoy Is Host On Constitution Day

Diplomatic and Soeial Circles Well Represented at Reception in Honor of Nation's Liberation From Absolute Monarchy.

By Elizabeth Ford.

Stealing the show from "Didi" Rajamaitri is a hard job, but Mrs. Thomas Burke, who returned recently with the Flying Caravan from South America, came close to doing it yesterday at the Siamese Legation.

A reception was held there in honor of Siam's Constitution Day, celebrating the change in 1932 from an absolute to a constitutional monarchy.

Washington society, which, it seems, likes nothing better than celebrating something to do with constitution, turned out en masse for the affair.

No flags or festive buntings were evident in the well-filled salons, but on the buffet a white elephant frosted to the top of a pink cake represented one of Siam's emblems.

In the center salon, with its smooth whit ewalls and rich wine-colored draperies at windows facing on swank Kalorama road, the Minister and Mme. Rajamaitri greeted the guests. The hostess wore a floor-length gown of ashes of roses. Early in the afternoon, little Didi Rajamaitri, in dotted Swiss trimmed with gay blue ribbons, stood with her parents in the receiving line, but later she disappeared, whisked away, no doubt, to the more serious business of eating supper.

And then, with Mr. Burke, Mrs. Burke arrived, stunning in black and enthusiastic about her trip, to become, with Mme. Rajamaitri, the center of attention during the second half of the reception.

Lindsays Among Early Arrivals

The British Ambassador and Lady Lindsay, the latter in a brown ensemble, were among the early arrivals, as was Mrs. Henry A. Wallace. Mrs. Homer S. Cummings, in brown, had with her her house guests from Long Island —Mr. and Mrs. George Hepburn, the latter wearing silver lame cut on semitailored lines.

Mrs. William D. Leahy, wife of Admiral Leahy, Chief of Naval Operations, was accompanied by her sister, Mrs. Albert Niblack. Mrs. Gilbert Hitchcock wore a handsome black outfit, while Mrs. Edwin T. Meredith was in black and silver fox. Other guests were Maj. and Mrs. Parker West. And seeming to have no trouble in wending their way through the crowded salons, the Misses Ann and Eleanor Meem, in hunters' green and russet-colored hats, were everywhere at once. They accompanied their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Grant Meem.

Among members of the diplomatic set present were the Ambassador of Mexico and Senora Castillo Najera, the latter wearing black with an arrow-like ornament on her hat. They were accompanied by their daughter, Senorita Erma Castillo Najera, and her cousin, Senorita Lupe Davilla, both of whom were in green.

Diplomatic Set Well Represented

Others from the diplomatic circles were the Minister of Yugoslavia and Mme. Fottich, the Minister of Finland and Mme. Jarnefelt, the latter slim and graceful in gray; the Minister of Bulgaria and his bride, Mme. Naoumoff; the Minister of Panama and Senora de Boyd, Ralph William Close, the Minister of South Africa, the Minster of Czechoslovakia and Mme. Hurban and the First Secretary of the Canadian Legation and Mrs. Merchant Mahoney, the latter in brown.

Glimpsed also were Mrs. Sol Bloom in black, and Miss Vera Bloom in a black coat and wine-colored hat; Mrs. Royal S. Copeland in black trimmed with red; Mrs. Dion Williams in green; Mrs. Sidney Taliaferro, attractive in an up-to-the-minute version in black velvet of the old-fashioned poke bonnet; Mrs. Wallace Distler, and the First Secretary of the Rumanian Legation and Mme. Babes.

Mrs. Francis Parkinson Keyes had with her Mrs. William A. Becker, president general of the D. A. R. Others present were Mrs. Robert H. Jackson, Mrs. Lothrop Stoddard in mink, Mrs. Walter Tuckerman and Mrs. Louis Schapiro and Mark Schapiro, her son.

As a matter of fact, virtually everyone in the social register and the diplomatic list said how-do-you-do to the Minister and Mme. Rajamaitri during the afternoon.

About the Town

With Dudley Harmon

JOHN L. LEWIS and Mrs. Lewis will be guests of honor at a reception to be given on Sunday, December 19, by Senator Joseph Guffey and the Guffey girls—the Misses Ida and Pauletta Guffey, his sisters. The Pennsylvania Senator, father of the coal bill which bears his name, is fast becoming the Capital's premiere party-giver. First it was the hunting trip on which he took Vice President Garner, Polish Ambassador Potocki and several others; then the dinner which he gave recently at the Raleigh, where the spoils were devoured. . . . John L. Lewis gets around, too. The other night, resplendent in a tuxedo, he was among those in first row seats at the National Theater.

DUDLEY HARMON.

Many Parties Will Precede Gridiron Fete

Pre-Dinner Functions Are Planned for Out-of-Town Guests.

IT LOOKS AS IF the whole town is in training for Washington's big gridiron event which takes place tonight and which, as everyone knows, has nothing to do with football.

People are pouring in from all over the country for the kick-off and half the hostesses of Washington are entertaining at pre-dinner events for out-of-town guests.

This sort of thing will go on madly all through the week-end if signs can be believed. In fact, this press putsch bids fair to make even the wary forget how many days there are until Christmas.

Top party of the evening will be Mrs. Roosevelt's "widiron" dinner at the White House where not only the wives of men attending the regular gridiron affair but also Washington newspaper women, members of the Woman's National Press Club and the Newspaper Women's Club will be the guests. Official grande dames will be present too.

• • • •

THE SECRETARY of War and Mrs. Harry Woodring will give an informal supper party this evening, and one of the most colorful festivities in connection with the Gridiron holiday will be the breakfast tomorrow morning given by Jay Hayden at which Alf Landon will be the guest cum laude.

Senator and Mrs. Bennett Champ Clark started festivities early by entertaining Judge and Mrs. Robert Otto, of St. Louis, at dinner Thursday evening.

Representative and Mrs. Robert Low Bacon are entertaining tomorrow in honor of Mrs. and Mrs. Henry P. Fletcher. Mr. Fletcher was formerly chairman of the Republican National Committee.

• • • •

AT THE HOME OF Dr. and Mrs. John Oliver LaGorce are Mr. and Mrs. Gene Tunney and Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Kudner, who will be guests of honor at a party which the LaGorces are giving just before the Gridiron dinner gets under way.

Also, tomorrow Mrs. Henry Wilder Keyes—Frances Parkinson Keyes—will contribute to the capital kaleidoscope with a breakfast for a pot-pourri of out-of-town and in-town friends. Tomorrow afternoon from 5 to 7 o'clock, the President of the Gridiron Club and Mrs. George Gould Lincoln will entertain at the Willard.

Mr. and Mrs. Merle Thorpe are having guests at their country place, Pooks Hill, on the Rockville road, and Mrs. Arthur Vandenberg is giving a luncheon today for Mrs. Warren Wheaton, of Philadelphia, who has many friends here.

Miss Rutherford To Be Honored

Mother to Entertain With Luncheon at Their Home Today.

Mrs. Harry K. Rutherford will entertain at luncheon today in honor of her debutante daughter, Miss Dorothy Ann Rutherford, in their home on Wyoming avenue.

Among the guests will be Miss Grace Warring, Miss Nancy Hicks, Miss Janice Robb, Miss Laura Ellis, Miss Margaret Hall, Miss Helen Wilson, Miss Rosemary Newman, Miss Margaret Woodbury, Miss Ann Grosvenor, and Miss Jessica Johnson.

Miss Rutherford attended Holton Arms School and was graduated from the Gardner School in New York. Last spring she was guest of Sir John N. and Lady Leigh of Carlton House Terrace, attended many of the Coronation festivities, and thereafter made an extensive tour of Europe. She had originally expected to take a world cruise with her grandmother this winter, but has postponed that until spring and will take part in debutante events for the remainder of the season. She will be presented at the Black and White Ball December 21, and will be entertained at dinner preceding the gala dance.

Envoy From Italy And Donna Suvich Honored in N. Y.

At a supper given on Monday in New York the Italian Ambassador and Donna Matilde de Suvich were the guests of honor of Count and Countess Pecci-Blunt. Others in the party were Mr. and Mrs. Harold E. Talbott, Sheldon Whitehouse and Viscount d'Origny.

The affair took place in the Iridium room of the St. Regis where on the same evening, New York society turned out for a gilded "Big Apple" contest.

Among the many participating in the contest were the Duchess of Westminster, who recently visited in Washington; Mrs. Vincent Astor who three-foured off with the waltz prize, and Cecil Beaton, well-known photographer and man about town.

Miss Mary Adams Arts Club Hostess

Miss Mary B. Adams will be hostess at the Arts Club next Wednesday afternoon from 4:30 until 6, when sketches made by Miss Bertha Noyes for the Bal Boheme will be exhibited. Since the theme of this year's ball is "On the Island of Bali," photographs of the island taken by Willis Lindquist will also be shown, as well as a display of costume designs and Balinese carvings copied by students of the Abbott Art School. The exhibition will continue at the clubhouse for a week or ten days, and will be open to the public from 9 to 5.

Next Wednesday tea will be served, and among those expected to be present are patronesses and box holders of last year's Bal Boheme. Mrs. Samuel Kimberley is chairman of boxes.

Mrs. Thomas Burke, of Washington, ranking member of the delegation, declared the Latin-American people listened with open ears and the mission made a wonderful impression everywhere."

Mrs. Burke, who is a Chilean by birth, said, as a South American, she was agreeably surprised to see the real friendship felt by the Latin Americans for this country. "They regard President Roosevelt as a savior of democracy and a person who will keep peace in the Americas," she said. "In Nicaragua members of a labor group came to the airport to greet us and declared they realized, for the first time, the people of this country were trying to be really good friends."

Real Friendliness Evident Everywhere

Everywhere, there was a genuine response of friendliness, said Mrs. Burke, who talked with people in many walks of life in the various countries, conversing with them not only as a member of the official delegation but as a native of South America.

"There is a great awakening among the women in Chile," she said. "They watch with intense interest what women of the United States are doing and desire to follow their progress. Throughout South America, the people are aware of the trend in politics here and have high regard for our Secretary of State and are also gratified and flattered that our Undersecretary, Sumner Welles, both speaks their language fluently and understands their problems.

Mrs. Burke and Mrs. Burton W. Musser, of Salt Lake City, who was a member of the Buenos Aires delegation last winter, returned to Washington together yesterday morning. Today at 10 o'clock Mrs. Rebecca Hourwich Reyher, of New York, a third member of the Flying Caravan, and Mrs. Gaeta Wold Boyer, of the Mandate Committee, who preceded the caravan a week, arranging details of the trip in each country, will return together from Mexico City. Mrs. E. W. Frost, of Arkansas, the fourth member of the caravan, but who went only as far as Lima, Peru, came from her home to Washington to greet the others and share honors with them today at the luncheon being given at the Carlton by the People's Mandate Committee as a welcome.

Mrs. Musser yesterday afternoon took tea with Mrs. George Dern and a few other friends from Utah, giving them an account of the 17,000-mile journey. She and Mrs. Burke came directly through from Guatemala, which they left early Thursday morning.

Airlines Co-operate To Keep Schedule

Thursday afternoon, about 4 o'clock, Mrs. Burke and Mrs. Musser left Mexico City, where it was so warm they were wearing summer clothes. The weather had been unfavorable for flying for several days in the South, and they were delayed in their arrival at Brownsville, Tex. A plane was held two hours, waiting for them and, again at Pittsburgh, the airlines co-operated and held a plane so as to enable them to make connections and reach Washington on schedule yesterday.

They took practically no time to rest after their long flight, but were greeting friends all day. They found it difficult to realize they were again in Washington and in a winter climate.

Representative Caroline O'Day, who is a member of the People's Mandate Committee, will preside at today's luncheon. Secretary of State Cordell Hull and the Ambassador of Peru will be the speakers and each member of the group will relate briefly some of her impressions of the tour.

Among the interesting guests from out of town who will attend will be Mrs. Burke's mother, Senora Mercedes del Pulgar; Mrs. Gerard Swope, of New York, vice chairman of the Mandate Committee; Vida Milholland, chairman of the New York branch, and Miss Katherine Devereus, also of New York.

'Toy Matinee' for Children Helps Christmas Plan Today

Women's Council of Federation of Churches Sponsors Movie Program for Benefit of Alley Yuletide Project.

This is the big day! Long before 9 o'clock this morning Junior and Jane will be standing in line with their parents in front of R. K. O. Keith's Theater, dolls, baseballs, blackboards, drums—all kinds of toys in their hands as tickets for the Christmas movie program sponsored to aid the alley Christmas project of the Woman's Council of the Federation of Churches. Boys and girls and grown-ups will all be admitted for one toy, size and shape not specified.

The toys, of course, must be new or well re-conditioned. No one would want to bring a gift which would not mean real pleasure to the child receiving it, and all these are to gladden the hearts of children living in Washington's alleys.

Mrs. Frank A. Linzel, president of the Woman's Council; Mrs. Thomas J. Howerton, chairman of its juvenile court committee; Miss Etta Mai Russel, juvenile court worker for the council; Hardie Meakin, manager of the theater, and representatives of The Washington Post, which is co-operating in the plan, will be there to help gather in the toys and greet the contributors.

Yesterday, in one of the series of broadcasts over station WJSV, acquainting Washington with the needs of its alley dwellers, Mrs. Howerton interviewed Mrs. Fannie B. Colonna, who has lived adjacent to Schott's court since going there as a bride in 1891. She and her husband became interested in the residents of the alley and during all the years have helped them, taking them where they could receive medical aid; giving them financial assistance when they were about to be evicted because they could not pay their rent.

"When Miss Russell started her campaign for stories, I had the children come to my back yard," said Mrs. Colonna, "and there they enjoyed stories and refreshments. I have taken children down town and fitted them with shoes and often sent meals to one family of nine children when they had nothing. On Thanksgiving, I baked a pudding and a cake to make it seem more like Thanksgiving. We had a Christmas tree last year and gave every family in the alley blankets, candy and oranges."

Mrs. Colonna is near the alley, knows its needs and finds joy in doing something to relieve them. She told over the radio about her alley neighbors yesterday so others would do their part to help out on Christmas. Every toy brought to Keith's this morning will mean a smile from a grateful little child on Christmas Day.

Mrs. G. J. P. Barger, who is in charge of the service this Christmas in Schott's court, which is between First and Second, and B and C streets northeast, also was interviewed by Mrs. Howerton in the broadcast. She described the 29 two-story brick dwellings which are occupied there. The listing of residents shows there are 25 couples, 41 children under 12 years and 43 single persons, widows and older children, living in these houses, which have neither gas nor electricity. Mrs. Barger was for 15 years a missionary in Africa and the work of carrying the Christmas message to those in need is not new to her. She invited anyone interested to join in the service about the alley trees on Christmas Eve—but before there can be trees, there must be toys to distribute, and this is Toy Day at Keith's Theater.

"A day at the Seville Fair—alas, and how many people whom I shall describe may never again dance or ride there."

Dr. Irene A. Wright, who returned from Spain 18 months ago after having spent 24 years there devoting herself to research in its archives, today will be hostess at a meeting of the Society of Women Geographers and will tell of the fair as she remembers it. Mrs. Letitia Ballard Wright, her mother, will show her collection of Spanish posters such as were issued annually by the City of Seville to advertise its spring festivals. Each year a competition was held in which young artists were entered. Mrs. Wright collected them during her entire residence in Spain, and some are signed by names now famous. All are brilliantly colored.

Senora Dona Gloria Giner de los Rios, wife of the Spanish Ambassador, is expected to be present this afternoon as a guest of honor. She is the author of geographies for the lower grades, and Dr. Wright's 4-year-old adopted daughter, Flor, is the proud possessor of an autographed copy of one of the second series. Senora de los Rios is known widely for her educational work.

Dr. Wright's daughter, herself a Sevillana, will attend in costume. She has a typical flamenca dress made of cream-colored calico with emerald green polka dots; the skirt is long and full and flounced, and she wears an emerald green manton and a matching high comb with orange-colored flowers in her hair dressed high.

So attired she attended fairs in Seville from the time she could walk, and at the age of 2, with others of her size, was essaying the provincial dance of Seville at Labradores to the clicking of her castanets. Over there girls are taught to play the castanets and dance Sevillanas as they are taught to walk. Now, after a year and a half here, Flor tries to do a tap dance instead.

Refreshments will be a duplication of those served in the casetas of the Seville fair—dry sherry, bread, cheese, olives, sausage and potato chips.

MRS. CORDELL HULL and Mrs. Stanley Reed will be the honor guests at the bimonthly tea at the Woman's National Democratic Club today.

Mrs. Wilbur W. Hubbard, president of the club, will head the receiving line, and have with her the wives of members of the "little cabinet," who are members of the club.

* * * *

MRS. WILLIAM E. NORTHAM, vice regent of the Brigadier General Rezin Beall Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, will entertain members and their husbands today at an oyster roast at Benedict, Md.

The afternoon meeting presided over by Miss Byrd Belt, regent, will feature a toy party, when donations will be placed in Christmas boxes being packed for one of the mountain schools sponsored by the D. A. R.

A SERIES of Sunday teas is being given by Mrs. Earle W. Richardson from 4 to 7 at her home, 1914 I street northwest, for groups from Abigail Hartman Rice Chapter, D. A. R. Mrs. Richardson is past regent and at present chairman of the hospitality committee. Miss Dorothy G. Gatchell is assisting, and Miss Marie E. Rice, regent of the chapter, and Mrs. Edgar E. Good, vice regent, will be honor guests at the series.

ONE of the old newspapers in the collection displayed at the League of American Pen Women's Book Fair is the Paducah (Ky.) Daily News, founded in 1871 by Thaddeus Constantine Ballard, grandfather of Miss Marguerite Merigold, president of the D. C. Branch of the L. A. P. W. He was the editor under whom Irvin S. Cobb received his early training.

Miss Merigold's mother recently had published an amusing story of how she picked up the sponge with which the type was being washed just before the forms were ready for the press one day, when she was four or five years old, and pied all the type. She was visiting the composing room with her father, who left her alone for a moment and, with a desire to be helpful, she imitated the work of the man who had been cleaning the hand-set type. As the result of her well-intended childish efforts, the whole force had to be put to work, resetting that issue of the Paducah News.

Under Mrs. Shryock's administration, the national organization whose membership is 27,000, being one of the pioneer women's fraternities, founded in 1870, has been the first national sorority to adopt a clubhouse plan for alumnae, having recently purchased the first unit of the Kappa Hearthstones, a beautiful Southern mansion in Winter Park, Fla.

The executive board of the alumnae entertained the national officers after the tea at dinner at the Iron Gate Tea Room. While in Washington, the grand officers visited the active chapter at Maryland University in their new house, and the chapter at George Washington University in their rooms at the Pan-Hellenic house.

Post Prizes Unearth New Yule Candies

Mexican Orange Recipe First Among Many Odd Entries.

Record-Breaking Number of Entries Received in Contest.

By Jean Green.

THOSE who want something new and different in the way of Christmas candies will receive many valuable suggestions from prize-winning recipes in The Post contest. Not only was a record-breaking number of recipes received, but there were so many unusual ones that the judges found it difficult to select winners.

JEAN GREEN.

The contest proved conclusively that the old custom of making Christmas candy is more than holding its own. Not only from the District, but from all nearby States, were recipes received, some of them having seen service at Christmas time for several generations.

Mexican Orange Is Winner.

The first-prize winner in the contest is Mexican orange candy, a most unusual concoction and one that has a rare and delicious flavor. The recipe was submitted by Mrs. James Freeland Dunlop, 1800 Key Boulevard apartments, Colonial Village, Va. The charm of this candy consists in its light texture and the delicate flavor that is imparted by orange peel. This takes away the too-sweet taste most candies have and makes this the perfect candy to pass around Christmas afternoon after the turkey dinner.

Second prize was awarded for a candy that is simple to make and healthful for children. It is fig crunch and the recipe was submitted by Mrs. S. W. McGowan, 1746 Lamont street northwest. Being rich with figs, this candy is very nourishing for between-meal snacks. Instead of figs, a mixture of nuts, crystallized cherries and citron can be used to give a more sophisticated flavor.

Turkish paste, a candy that is rarely made at home and is found only in the better candy shops, was awarded third prize. The recipe for this was submitted by Natalie Goodman, 2436 Eighteenth street northwest. The success of this candy depends on its firm texture and fruity flavor.

English toffee, the recipe for which was submitted by Mrs. Dewey Reed, Poolesville, Md., was awarded fourth prize. This very delicious candy includes chocolate and pecans in its ingredients.

Hawaiian Candy Takes Prize.

Christmas Hawaiian, a very suitable candy for the holiday season, was given fifth prize, the recipe being submitted by Nancy Kelsey, 1321 Fairmont street northwest. Nut meats and pineapple make this candy nourishing and appealing and also devoid of the heaviness that goes with over-rich candy.

Two particularly interesting recipes were given honorable mention. One was for after-dinner pillar mints, submitted by Mrs. Charles Malone, 714 Stoneleigh Court, and one for chocolate fudge, submitted by Mrs. John Watters, 331 North Mildred street, Charles Town, W. Va.

The mints can be made in advance and used for many holiday occasions. The fudge recipe is practical and easy to prepare.

PRIZE CHRISTMAS CANDIES

Following are the prize-winning recipes in The Post's contest on Christmas candies. Two honorable mention awards are included.

Mexican Orange Candy.

(First Prize.)

3 cups of granulated sugar
1½ cups of whole milk
Grated rind of two oranges
½ cup of butter
Pinch of salt
1 cup of nutmeats (pecans or black walnuts)

Melt one cup of sugar in a large skillet or kettle while the milk is scalding in a double boiler. When the sugar is melted to a yellow sirup, add the hot milk all at once, stirring constantly. It will boil up quickly, so be sure to use a large-sized skillet or kettle. Add the remaining sugar, stir until dissolved and cook until it forms a ball when tried in cold water. Just before taking from the fire add the orange rind, salt, butter and chopped nuts. Beat until creamy and pour into a buttered platter to cool. Cut into 1-inch squares.

MRS. JAS. FREELAND DUNLOP.
1800 Key Boulevard Apts., Colonial Village, Va.

Fig Crunch.

(Second Prize.)

Mix thoroughly two cups of dark brown sugar and a cup of evaporated milk. Let this cook slowly for about 40 minutes. Test just as in making fudge until it forms a soft ball in water. Then beat in a cup of chopped figs and pour on a buttered dish or, better still, on a dish covered with oiled paper, and cut in squares when hard.

MISS S. W. McGOWAN.
1746 Lamont Street.

Turkish Paste.

(Third Prize.)

3 tablespoons of gelatin
½ cup of cold water
2 cups of granulated sugar
½ cup of boiling water
3 tablespoons of orange juice or grapefruit juice
1 cup of chopped nuts
Coloring
Confectioner's sugar.

Soften the gelatin in cold water for 5 minutes. Put sugar into saucepan. Add gelatin and stir until dissolved and simmer gently for 20 minutes. Stir to keep from sticking. Take from the fire when cool, add juice. Add a few drops of coloring. Stir in the nuts and let stand until mixture begins to thicken. Stir and turn into a wet flat pan ¾ to 1 inch thick. Let stand in a cool place for 8 hours. Turn out on a board sprinkled with confectioner's sugar and cut into cubes with a knife dipped in boiling water. Roll in the confectioner's sugar.

NATALIE GOODMAN.
2436 Eighteenth St. N. W.

English Toffee.

(Fourth Prize.)

1 cup of granulated sugar
½ pound of butter.
3 tablespoons of water
1 teaspoon of vanilla
3 small Hershey bars (plain)
¾ cup of chopped pecans

Place the first four ingredients in a saucepan and cook until browned (about 10 minutes) stirring all the time to prevent burning. Pour into a buttered fudge pan. Lay the chocolate bars across the hot base and spread. Sprinkle with chopped pecans. Cool and break into pieces.

MRS. DEWEY REED.
Poolesville, Md.

Christmas Hawaiian.

(Fifth Prize.)

2 cups of brown sugar
2-3 cup of milk
2 tablespoons of butter.
1 tablespoon of white corn sirup
1 teaspoon of vanilla
½ cup of chopped walnuts
½ cup of unsweetened shredded pineapple (preferably fresh)

Mix the sugar, milk and sirup. Cook slowly, until the soft ball is formed in water (about 238 degrees). Remove from the fire. After the bubbles have disappeared, add buttter and vanilla. When partially cooled beat until creamy. Add the nutmeats and pineapple, which has been drained of juice and pressed dry between the folds of a dry, clean cloth. It is essential for the pineapple to be as dry as possible.

NANCY KELSEY.

After Dinner Pillar Mints.

(Honorable Mention.)

4 cups of granulated sugar
2 cups of boiling water
¼ pound of butter
Coloring and flavoring to suit the taste

The water should be poured over the sugar and dissolved by stirring before the candy is put over the heat. After a few minutes of cooking the butter is added, care being taken that there is room enough in the vessel so that it does not boil over. The butter causes it to foam slightly. Cook without stirring until it "worms" when tested in cold water. This is the soft thread stage.

Pour on a marble slab and let cook until it can be pulled with the fingers as taffy. Coloring and the essence of peppermint should be added during the early stages of the pulling.

After a few minutes it will be hard enough to cut into pieces with a pair of heavy scissors, after which it is laid, pieces not touching, on waxed paper until it hardens. Several hours is required. Place in air-tight tin box or bucket for several days, at which time it will appear chalky and dry and will melt in your mouth.

If it is not a success the first time recook it by adding the two cups of water and boiling as before. No more butter is required, but more peppermint and perhaps a bit more coloring.

MRS. CHARLES MALONE.
714 Stoneleigh Court, D. C.

Chocolate Fudge.

(Honorable Mention.)

2 cups of white sugar
2 squares of bitter chocolate
2 tablespoons of corn sirup
2-3 cup of milk
2 tablespoons of butter
1 teaspoon of vanilla extract

Cook the sugar, milk, sirup and chocolate until the soft ball stage is reached. Cook slowly. Remove from fire and when bubbling has ceased add the butter and vanilla. Do not stir. Let cook until lukewarm, almost cold. Beat well until creamy. Pour into pans and mark in squares. One of the secrets of the preparation is not beating while hot.

MRS. JOHN WATTERS.
331 N. Mildred St., Charles Town, W. Va.

Condiment and Olives Good Sea Food Sauce

Distinction may be attained in sauces for seafoods with some less-used condiment plus chopped or sliced riple olives.

As an example, a cooked salad dressing, with horse radish and finely chopped ripe olives, gives substance, richness and contrast. It is delicious, too, as a change from the ever-present tartar sauce.

Fruit Cakes Improved By Process o fAging

Most fruit cakes are best when they have had time to age a little. They taste better and they cut better if they are made several weeks before being served. On the other hand, an apple-sauce cake, which can be just as spicy and fruity as real fruit cake, will cut very nicely a day after it is baked. Although most apple-sauce cake recipes call only for raisins and nuts, they can be made richer with the addition of citron, candied cherries, and orange or lemon peel. They are less expensive to make than fruit cake even when the extra fruit is added.

Combined Hues Of 'Cellophane' Make Gifts Gay

New Color Variations Are Possible by Mixing Wrap-Like Pigments.

NEW variations of color for holiday packages may be obtained with transparent wrapping by using two standard colors and combining them in much the same manner as pigments are mixed. At a recent demonstration given by the "Cellophane" division of the Du Pont Co., Howard Ketcham, color stylist, showed how to "mix" a number of subtle shades with gift wrapping by laying one color of the cellulose film over and other.

"Splendid surprise treatments are possible," said Ketcham, "with the transparent color filter effect that the film provides. For example, amber over light green will prdouce an attractive lemon hue. Blue over light green provides a deep-sea turquoise. Pink and tango produce a dark tan. Amber and violet combine to make a rich dubonnet."

When the box is colored, Mr. Ketcham uses a different color of the transparent wrapping to obtain a new effect. On a red box, for instance, violet wrapping produces a striking magenta. Cover an orange container with light green "Cellophane," and it becomes yellow green. If the box is yellow, light blue wrappings transforms it into a rich Araby green. With a purple-blue box and amber wrapping, the result is jockey green. A combination that makes a red-purple package is a plain purple box veiled with pink "Cellophane" celluloise film, while the same wrapping will turn a sky-blue box into a regal purple package.

Of course these color variations can be produced over white boxes by wrapping them first with a film of violet, green, tango or other color, and then spreading on a second wrapping to obtain the usual treatment.

Avoid using one dark film over another Mr. Ketcham advises, as the package will tend to dark grays that will be uninteresting and lack individuality.

Slim Lingerie.

New York (AP).—The slim pencil-line seen in many house coats and day dresses is reflected in the slender cut of new lingerie, since full shirted slips and nightdresses are not comfortable under slender frocks and house coats. Thus a whole host of Christmas slips in crepe and shimmering satin (which continues to mount in favor) are cut with slim skirts and long, curved, fitted waistlines. Work has been done above the waist, chiefly by elasticized inserts, to enable them to mold diaphragm and lift the bust.

Research in Vitamins.

The Nobel Prize in medicine in 1937 goes to a Hungarian, Szent-Gyorgyi. The work which got him this award has been mostly to do with the vitamins, and according to the news accounts, all the candidates who were considered for Nobel prize winners were considered on account of their research in vitamins. This is interesting to me, for I have been hammering on that subject, perhaps even tiresomely, for several years.

Dr. Szent-Gyorgyi's research was to show that the adrenal glands secrete a substance, ascorbic acid, which he has found to be identical chemically with Vitamin C. Vitamin C is the vitamin which prevents scurvy. The technical name for scurvy is "scorbutus." Hence the name—ascorbic acid.

The story goes that for his experiments he needed large quantities of this substance, and even when he was furnished with barrels full of adrenal glands from American stockyards, he could not get enough. Here, by accident, as he was being served a native Hungarian dish, heavily spiced with paprika, it occurred to him from the smell that this might have some ascorbic acid. He found, to his surprise, that it was the best source of vitamin C that he had ever tried.

One of the most significant features of his research is the possibility that the body itself secretes these vitamins that all the physiologists have insisted should be part of a balanced diet and be taken in by the mouth. We have known for a long time that the liver stores vitamin D, and that probably adults do not need as much of that because their own livers furnish it. Many skeptics have pointed out that people on quite a limited diet do not suffer from lack of vitamins, and the reason may be that we have good manufacturing plants of these substances inside our bodies. At times, of course, they fail, and it is pretty well demonstrated that as people advance into middle life their stores of vitamin B get lower, and this may be supplied artificially with benefit by concentrated products.

It will probably not do to neglect the vitamin factor in diet planning, but at any rate, it is encouraging to think that we will not be entirely without vitamins for some time, even if they are not furnished in the diet.

Hot Bath Soothes Jangled Nerves

If counting sheep doesn't help your particular brand of sleeplessness, try a hot bath. It will let you down gently into a sound, restful slumber.

Get into a tub filled with water slightly above body temperature—about 100 degrees F. on the bath thermometer is about right. Use soap lavishly to remove soil and skin secretions, then lie back and relax for 10 minutes or so.

To Flavor Meats.

The flavor of broiled meats can be changed by special treatment before broiling. A barbecue flavor can be given lamb chops by marinating them in a dressing made by mixing ½ teaspoon of salt, 1 teaspoon of dry mustard, ¼ teaspoon of paprika, 1 tablespoon of garlic, 5 tablespoons of mild-flavored oil, and vinegar. The chops should be left in the dressing for at least an hour.

Broiled Foods.

Meats emerge tender and full of their own juices when properly broiled. Fruits become mellow and a lovely brown. Certain vegetables undergo flavor changes that are for the better. Potatoes, halves of tomatoes, rings of onions, par-boiled carrots and sweet potatoes are examples.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Divorced Non-Catholic Seeks Authoritative Information on Catholic Law Governing Marriage.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a middle-aged man, a non-Catholic and divorced. The latter circumstance constitutes my problem. I am informed that while the church does not recognize divorce, nevertheless it holds certain marriages invalid in the first place; and that this applies to marriages between non-Catholics as well as to marriages between Catholics. I mean, they are invalid from the point of view of the church, although binding according to law. In such instances, I understand, the church recognizes legal divorce as complete annulment.

* * * *

Should this be true, is there anyone to whom I could go in order to learn whether my marriage was invalid in the eyes of the Catholic church? How can I get the church to rule on my case? Strange as it may seem, I have no Catholic friends with whom I can discuss my problem, with the sole exception of one person who cannot help under the circumstances . . . I would give anything to have the final word on my case. If you can refer me to anyone who would discuss the situation with me, I shall be very grateful. TROUBLED.

* * * *

DEAR TROUBLED: I am told that Dr. Hubert L. Motry and Dr. Valentine Schaaf, both of Catholic University, are authorities on Catholic ecclesiastical law governing marriage; that they can be reached by letter addressed to them in care of the university, and that either man can provide "the final word" in your case. If you have a chance for making a second marriage which would be valid in the eyes of the church (for I assume that is your purpose) you will be told the proper procedure to follow in making yourself eligible. In calling your case to the attention of one or the other of these authorities, it will be best to outline your story briefly, asking the courtesy of a personal appointment for more detailed discussion. M. H.

Wife's Social Dilemma.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: My husband is out of town for several weeks. A very fine man whom we have not met but who is a good friend of both our families is arriving shortly to take up duties in the same firm with which my husband is associated. His wife is detained in her home State due to illness. I hate postponing for several weeks an effort to be hospitable and yet I am wondering what can be done in such a situation? Could you possibly oblige me with some suggestions? Sincerely, READER.

* * * *

DEAR READER: If you are accustomed to having small groups of friends in for tea, cocktails, supper or dinner as a matter of course, there is no reason why you shouldn't plan some such gathering in the near future, and invite the newcomer by telephone to be one additional guest. The gathering would not be arranged for him; he would simply be asked to it. The presence of one or two other couples who are family friends would make the occasion altogether proper, even though your husband is out of town. The man could be asked for dinner again later, after your husband returns.

* * * *

If, however, you never have a mixed company of friends in during your husband's absence, it would be preferable to telephone the man at his office, introduce yourself as "Susan Doe Blank, John Henry Blank's wife," who employs this means of making Mr. So-and-So welcome to Washington. Tell him that although you have never met him, both you and your husband regard him as an old friend, since he has been a friend of your respective families for so long, and that he must arrange to have dinner with you as soon as your husband returns from wherever he is, which will be in so many days. Ask after his wife's health, say you are looking forward with pleasure to meeting her; say that John Henry is so pleased he is to be with the firm; remind him again he is to have dinner with you soon, and sign off. M. H.

Bride-to-Be Asks Help.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have been engaged for a year and am to be married in June. However, I am completely uninstructed along the lines of love in marriage, sex, etc., and I do not wish to enter marriage blindly. My mother refuses to discuss this subject with me and you are the only one I can turn to. Would you please recommend one or two good books on this subject for me to read? Thank you. G. A.

* * * *

DEAR G. A.: One of the most valuable books of this kind that I have come across is Theodore Van de Velde's "Ideal Marriage." Approaching his subject with delicacy and even reverence, the author discusses it with impressive scientific authority. As a medical practitioner and confidante of hundreds of happily as well as unhappily married persons, he brings great understanding of human nature to his discussion of what makes marriage ideal or the reverse. Whoever reads this book is instructed in all that he needs to know about the so-called "facts of life," in such a manner that his highest ideals and aspirations emerge affirmed and invigorated. M. H.

Desserts Helped By Coffee Sauce

America's most popular flavor? It's good old mocha java, according to the United States Bureau of Standards.

So if you have been associating coffee's smooth, delicious taste and aroma only with the morning cup and the perfect dinner climax, you may enjoy experimenting with coffee as a flavor in cakes, candy, custards, icing and fillings. It is a nice substitute for fresh fruit flavors.

Coffee Sauce.

(For Ice Cream)

1½ cups milk
½ cup ground coffee
1-3 cup sugar
1 tablespoon cornstarch
Few grains salt

Scald the milk with the coffee and let stand 20 minutes. Strain. Mix the sugar, cornstarch and salt, and pour on gradually the hot infusion. Return to pan and cook for five minutes, stirring. Serve hot.

Dignified Luxury by New Hollywood Designer

Unique fashion ideas are featured in the burnt amber wool frock (below). The diagonal hemline is echoed in the seam treatment. Note dramatic necklace and matching bracelet of natural oakwood set with large topaz cabuchons and studded with gold. The height of luxury is expressed in the white satin evening gown embroidered with pearls and rhinestones, the skirt banded with sable. Both gowns modeled by Luli Deste and created for her by Robert Kalloch, Hollywood designer, for her new picture, "She Married an Artist."

Furs Are Dramatic Entrance, Hollywood Designer Believes

Should Be Discarded After Obtaining Desired Effect, Robert Kalloch Asserts; Silhouette's Importance Stressed.

By Ethel Ehlen.
The Post Fashion Editor.

"FURS should be designed for a dramatic entrance and then discarded after the wearer has achieved the effect desired by that entrance," says Robert Kalloch, noted Hollywood designer. Lucky is the woman who is tall and slim, he maintains, because she is the inspiration of all modern fashion. In creating clothes for his private clientele, Kalloch, who is now designing for stars of the screen, employs the same basic principles as those he uses for cinema design. "For example," he explained in an interview by mail, "the silhouette is always my first consideration. Fabric is next and is very important, too, because the eye of the other woman is usually as discerning as the lens of the camera."

Silhouette problems are the same on and off the screen, Kalloch pointed out and both employ the same foresight when creating a new design. "The slim woman must be given added curves by studied design fabric selection and interesting dressmaker detail," he said. "But," he continued, "the plump figure presents a much more difficult problem. The silhouette for this type must always be vague, and the color schemes tactful. The gay, high-style notes must find their expression in well-chosen accessories." In designing for a woman of any age or figure classification, Kalloch does not adhere to any special fashion trend or style vagary, but combines the best features of each, to form a fitting background for the individual.

Lyons velvet and slipper satin are particularly liked by this authority as mediums for formal evening creations. "They lend themselves so gracefully to picturesque wraps and period-influenced gowns, and they represent the dramatic mood for glamour after dark," he commented. Kalloch has a special fondness for focusing interest on the cut of a skirt, or on the back of a gown. On the screen, however, he pointed out, it is usually the "above the table" interest that counts most, since the entire figure is rarely seen except in a "long shot." The coiffure should harmonize with the styling of the costume Kalloch believes, or the desired effect of the entire ensemble is lost. In fact, he explained, it is the meticulous attention to every detail which achieves a perfect ensemble; the completed picture.

Kalloch is a New Yorker by birth, although he has spent much time in Europe, particularly Paris. He studied art and designing, and started his career by painting portrait sketches of famous personages. His work attracted the attention of Anna Pavlowa with the result, that at the age of 18, he designed costumes for an entire Pavlowa ballet. Later, while in Paris, he created costumes for the Casino de Paris revue—while studying the work of the great coutouriers of the French capital. Returning to America, he was associated with several of the outstanding designers of New York for a number of years, recently attracting the attention of Hollywood, where he was summoned to design clothes for stars of the screen.

Among the famous women for whom Kalloch has designed clothes are Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, Julia Hoyt, Irene Castle, Mary Garden, Grace Moore, Irene Dunne, Madeleine Carroll, Jean Parker and Luli Deste.

Toasted Sardines, Asparagus Make Original Canapes

Every hostess in Hollywood would like to be famous for the originality of her canapes. According to Marcia Ralston, brunette beauty from Australia, a successful canape must be beautiful, delicious and unique. As a suggestion, she offers toasted sardines and asparagus fingers.

Cut slices of second-day sandwich bread into three strips. For each strip dip a sardine in melted butter and roll it in a mixture composed of equal parts of finely minced ham, bread crumbs and grated Tillamook cheese. Put the sardine on a strip, place the canapes in a broiling oven until very hot, then serve garnished with a bit of finely chopped chives.

The asparagus fingers are made by spreading strips of bread with tender asparagus which has been mashed and mixed with 1 teaspoon of horseradish, one-half teaspoon Worcestershire sauce and 1 tablespoon of mayonnaise. Spread in the center of each canape, edge with anchovy paste as it comes out of the tube and garnish with a tiny bit of pimento in the center.

Make Your Christmas Gifts

A CHARMING gift for someone you like very much—a little table decked out gaily in blue paint and silver stars. No one will guess that you made it yourself out of egg boxes.

You need only four boxes to make the table. Put them together according to either diagram.

After you've sandpapered them, fasten the boxes snugly together by nailing thin strips of wood from box to box. Then put on a round top of three-ply wood, apply a coat of flat white paint and next a quick-drying enamel.

For another inexpensive, artistic gift, choose lacquered gourds. They're all the rage these days and you can easily fix up a stunning bowl by drying a few gourds, seed-pods and pine cones, and lacquering them in brilliant reds, blues and yellows.

As for that little girl who's so good right now—wouldn't she love to have a Colonial doll house? With a simple plan and instructions you can make it in no time out of wallboard.

Complete directions for these and many other gifts are in our 40-page booklet, How to Make a Doll House HOUSE AND OTHER HAND-MADE and Other Hand-Made Gifts. Gifts mother can make, a girl can make, a boy can make—from stocking dolls to sailboats—all inexpensive and fun.

Send 15c for our booklet, "How to Make a Doll House and Other Hand-Made Gifts" to The Washington Post Home Institute, 109 West Nineteenth street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address, and the name of booklet.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes

New York, Dec. 10.

ALWAYS ONE to keep abreast of the vogues and vagaries of the hour, I have made it a point to gaze upon Mr. Jon Hall in the flesh, he being the handsome young rascal who defies the hurricane in Mr. Sam Goldwyn's exciting picture of that name.

ALICE HUGHES

Mr. Hall has just been unanimously elected the latest movie Dream Man—which is a lot of fun, no doubt, but is also rather dangerous for a good-looking young fellow suddenly chased through the streets by ferocious girls, stared and pointed at, and, in all, treated like a prize exhibit at the State fair. I find that Jon (which is just a tricky name, and not his own), is keenly aware of the perils of his new position, and is going to guard against them.

As Charles Hall Locher, who was born in Fresno, Calif., nearly 25 years ago, he was just another boy trying to crash the pictures. But fortune really smiled when he got the "Hurricane" lead, and now he is really off to the races. But he tells me that he is going to stay "regular" at all costs—that not even his astounding good fortune and the jobs to follow are going to inflate his handsome skull.

And it is a pleasure to report that he is even better looking face to face than he is on the screen. But the greatest favor we can do the boy is not to make too much fuss over him—a la Robert Taylor. For the promising young movie hero is not only advertised, but too often ruined, by his overloving friends.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—The very beautiful Adelaide Moffett, daughter of the former Federal Housing Commissioner, James A., has just opened her new career as a night club singer, warbling nightly in the very classy Trianon Room of the Hotel Ambassador. But Addie is one with a difference. "I read that I'm a wealthy heiress, and I'm just singing as a sort of whim. Not true at all. I need the money very much, and the favorite charity to which I am going to give the salary is myself." . . . Tragedy has stalked poor Addie, too. A year ago her handsome young husband, David Brooks, a nephew of Lady Astor, was killed by a fall from their hotel room window. . . .

Well, they've uncorked the cod liver oil jug at our big Bronx Zoo, for the animals have moved into their houses for the winter and need their sunshine vitamins. Director Dr. Blair tells me the beasts consume about 90 gallons of the stuff each winter!

* * * *

There's a report that Deanna Durbin may leave Hollywood for Broadway this winter, to appear in "Homespun," a play by 21-year-old Hilda Koenigsberg, a student at Hunter College. The show is said to resemble the Cinderella tale of Elaine Jacobs Barrymore, who also went to Hunter at one time. . . .

Fashion Show Looks to Both North, South

Skiing Costumes Vie With Swimming Suits at Capital Preview.

The sunny South and the blustery North merged for the afternoon last Thursday, when Woodward & Lothrop presented a fashion show of clothes for holidays in both directions. For the winter sports enthusiast there were numerous new skiing, skating and tobogganning outfits as good looking as they were cozy and warm. Skating outfits in the 1938 manner consisted of short-skirted dresses with matching and close-fitting knee pants, usually made of bright-colored velvet. Ski and toboggan outfits this year are interpreted in the long ski pants with jackets of heavy materials in white or gay colors, topped by visor caps.

Cruise and Southern resort clothes were by far in the majority at the fashion show, ranging from swimming and beach outfits, through casual cottons and silks, to formal evening and travel costumes. Outstanding in the beach wear was a dressmaker suit of red and white printed cotton with the new strapless top; the accompanying coat of self-material was ankle length. A new rayon fabric called "pigskin" was the medium for a white tailored suit with navy blue accessories. A very feminine-looking travel coat was made of gold tinted tweed with quilting as the decorative medium for the collarless neckline and loose sleeves. Tri-colors were much in evidence for clothes in the casual and spectator sports classification; such as green linen skirt, rust jacket-blouse and rust felt hat.

The cottons and linen frocks were shown in the inevitable white with brilliant-colored accessories and the popular Mexican prints. Many of these flaunted clever pleated or stitched skirts, with buttons parading down the entire back or front—some had accompanying boleros. Hats included calots of linen or felt; broad berets of shiny straws; swagger felts; turbans nad toques of bright silks; cartwheels of rough straws. For evening, the clothes were decidedly feminine and fragile-looking; floating chiffons topped with marabou jackets or velvet jackets embroidered in multi-colored wool flowers; picturesque taffeta gowns trimmed with hand-smocking. A particularly charming gown was made of amethyst chiffon with full skirt and a top made of plum-colored satin.

Quantity Buying Aids Housewives

Purchasing in quantities enables wise housewives to take advantage of the week-end sales and effect a substantial saving. When buying meats for roasts there are several ways to make excellent use of left-overs.

The roast may be diced and combined with a cream sauce and served over biscuits or in patty shells. Or the roast may be sliced thin and reheated in a barbecue sauce. Since the meat already is cooked, it needs only reheating. Long cooking toughens the meat.

Another excellent plan is to combine the last bits of roast with an equal amount of chopped potatoes. And any leftover gravy, season with salt and pepper and grated onion.

YOUR FIGURE, MADAME!

Reducing Too Rapidly Involves Peril of Looking Old.

By Ida Jean Kain.

IT CAN happen to you! Just when you are struggling the hardest to lose weight, some candid friend will say, "Don't lose so much weight that it makes you look old" and then add, too quickly to be comforting, "Not that you do, of course!"

This remark may have just enough truth in it to hurt. There is no sidestepping the fact that reducing can be an aging process. You replace fat either with firm contours or with wrinkles. That "reduced look" is the price you pay for quick changes in weight, or for going on an inadequate diet which drains the vitality. If you want to look younger as you reduce you must avoid aging mistakes.

Protect your skin as you slim down. Follow a balanced diet to nourish your skin, exercise to increase tonicity, and reduce so gradually that the skin contracts as you lose weight.

The skin is like a piece of elastic. During considerable weight gains the skin is unduly stretched and if long distended it tends to lose part of its elasticity. In an abrupt loss of considerable weight the skin is unable to accommodate itself quickly to this change in weight, and it slackens into folds and wrinkles.

Age itself is a factor in skin contraction. As one grows older the skin loses in elasticity, which means increased caution in reducing after middle age.

The skin's contractility is increased with exercise. Well-toned, and well-rounded muscles help to fill out the skin and to prevent wrinkles. When weight is lost without benefit of exercise, flabbiness results.

On a balanced diet with sufficient calories to cover two-thirds your energy expenditure, you do not get that spent, haggard look which follows a partial starvation menu. You should have daily: Lean meat, skimmed milk and eggs, fresh fruits and fresh vegetables.

Another serious mistake likely to be made by the over-ambitious reducer is that of reducing too far. It may be that normal weight for you is slightly above the streamline standard. You look best at the weight at which you feel best. Be careful not to over-reduce.

"Don't lose so much weight that you'll look old."

While dieting see that you drink plenty of water, for this helps ot carry off wastes from the body. Drink eight to ten glasses of water every day between meals. To avoid stretching the stomach, do not drink an excessive amount of water at meal time or just after the meal.

With all that is known today about weight reduction, there is no reason why you cannot grow slimmer, healthier and younger.

Steaming Stews Give Jaded Palates Variety

A well-made, nicely served stew needs no apologies. Beef chuck, cut in cubes, is used as a base for the stew pictured. Whole onions, potatoes and halves of carrots provide a colorful dish.

Many Cuts of Beef and Lamb Make Inexpensive Dish for Housewives, Economizing Before Christmas.

By Nancy Ellis.

THE AXIOM that contrast is the price of life has certainly been found true in menu planning. The palate seems to enjoy the unexpected, and becomes dull and unappreciative of the ordinary. So if you would have your family enjoy Christmas dinner to the utmost, then plan simple menus now so that Christmas feasting will be duly appreciated.

The simple menus also will do marvels in helping balance the food budget which in most households is apt to be limited next week in anticipation of holiday entertaining.

One of the most commonplace dishes is ordinary beef stew, yet when properly seasoned and served it has a rich tempting aroma and delicious taste. The type of meat to purchase and the method of preparation is very important if you wish to be completely successful in its preparation.

Beef Chuck Is Good.

Choose as a base for the stew one of the more inexpensive cuts of meat. Beef chuck, neck, shanks and flank are economical cuts. The meat should be cut into 1 and 2 inch cubes. Dredge cubes with flour and brown well in the hot fat. Then when they are seasoned with salt and pepper, cover with hot water. Keep the kettle covered tightly and simmer gently for two hours. It is important for the meat in the stew to simmer gently as the low temperature keeps it more tender.

In serving the stew, the meat and vegetables should be arranged attractively on a hot platter. The liquid in which the stew was cooked should be thickened for gravy and served in a separate dish.

There are many ways to vary the taste of the stew. Some of the usual vegetables are potatoes, carrots and onions. For variety, when stews are served often, use different vegetable combinations. Choose green beans, peas, celery, lima beans, cauliflower and cabbage.

For the sake of variety you may want to use different kinds of meat for the stew. Lamb makes delicious stew. Economical lamb cuts for this purpose are the neck, shank, breast or shoulder. Usually the meat is dredged and browned in hot fat before the liquid is added, but occasionaly you may want to omit this process in order to make the stew different. This unbrowned stew is known as a "white stew."

A variety of seasonings make possible a great number of stews. A mere dash of salt and pepper is enough in some cases but now and then try in addition a few peppercorns, or a bit of bay-leaf. Sometimes a pinch of thyme or a few cloves add the right flavor. Try seasoning the meat with a little mustard before browning for a piquant flavor. Even a wee bit of garlic may add a flavor you will like. Use all of these seasonings with discretion, however, as always it is better to have only a suggestion of an unusual flavor rather than an overwhelming bouquet.

Dumplings, also, may be cooked with the stew, if desired. These are dropped by spoonfuls on top of the meat and vegetables. The kettle is covered tightly and the dumplings allowed to steam for 12 minutes without uncovering. The stew with dumplings must be served immediately as dumplings grow flat with waiting.

This recipe for beef stew is cooked on top of the stove, then placed in a greased baking dish, topped with biscuits and baked in a hot oven (450 degrees) for 20 minutes.

Meat Pie With Hot Biscuits.

1 pound of beef shoulder
1 onion
4 tablespoons of butter
2 teaspoons of salt
⅛ teaspoon of pepper
1 bay leaf
2 cloves
1 cup of cooked died carrots
1 cup of peas
1 small can of mushrooms
3 tablespoons of flour

Dice the onions and brown in 2 tablespoons of fat. Dice the meat and corn. Add water and seasonings and simmer until tender. This will be about 1 hour. Add the vegetables. Blend the flour with the rest of the fat. Add to the meat and cook 10 minutes. Add enough water to make a gravy of nice consistency. Pour into a greased baking dish. Cover with small biscuits. Bake in hot oven (450 degrees) for 20 minutes.

Yuletide Notes Can Be Mailed With Packages

NEW YORK (AP).—Want to send a Christmas letter with your package so both will arrive at the same time?

There are two ways. One will cost a lot of money. The other won't.

If you inclose the letter in your package you'll have to pay first-class rates on the whole package. That's costly.

But if you attach the letter to the outside of the parcel you'll only have to pay first-class rates on the letter.

The package will go second, third or fourth class, depending on the contents.

This is how to do it:

Buy a package of labels printed: "This parcel contains merchandise which may be opened for inspection." You can't write or stamp those instructions on the package—but the label fulfills postoffice requirements.

Wrap your package securely with heavy cord. (Don't use tinsel twine.)

Put your own (return) address in the upper left corner. The address of the person to whom the gift is going belongs in the lower half—in the center if possible, otherwise in the lower right corner.

Then glue or tie the letter to the package.

The address must be on both letter and package.

If your package—or greeting card—is going to a woman:

Address it "Miss" if she is unmarried—no matter how young or old she is.

Address it to "Mrs. Noel Yuletide"—if the woman is or has been married. Using the husband's first name holds whether the husband is alive, dead or divorced unless the husband has remarried and there's likely to be a mix-up or the woman is known in business by her own name. Then you may use "Mrs. Martha Yuletide."

REDSKINS TO PIN HOPES ON BAUGH IN TITLE GAME

The Washington Post Sports

*X WASHINGTON: SATURDAY, DECEMBER 11, 1937 19

This Morning

Bear Coach Refuses to Goad Redskins.

By Shirley Povich.

Chicago, Dec. 10.—Now historic are the twin insults flung at the Redskins by Coach Steve Owens, of the New York Giants. Three days before the Eastern championship game last week, you recall, Owens, with a fine show of contempt, let fall a remark to the effect that "The Redskins' line doesn't belong in the same league with my Giants."

POVICH.

For that crack Head Coach Ray Flaherty, of the Redskins, was deeply grateful. It gave him the proper working basis for fomenting a high competitive pitch among his own athletes. Public scorn by Giants' coach was akin to Heaven-sent aid.

Flaherty flaunted newspaper clippings before his gang, never lost an opportunity to recall Owens' remarks. The Redskins were inflamed with a passion to make Owens eat his words. It was a coach's paradise.

And then, two days before the game, you recall, the Giants' coach revealed to New York newspapermen his selections for the all-pro league team for 1937. Not a Redskin name did it include. The inference was clear. No Redskin was good enough, in Owens' opinion.

Flaherty Fanned Flames.

Eagerly Flaherty seized upon that development, too. Point-blank he asked his athletes what they were going to do about it. Were they going to let the Giants snub Cliff Battles and Turk Edwards and Sammy Baugh and Charley Malone, guys who were qualified to make anybody's all-pro league team?

If beating the Giants became a passion with the Redskins after Owens' crack that "they didn't belong in the same league," then it became no less than an obsession after Owens' failure to include at least Battles and Edwards on his pro-league selections. The Redskins were genuinely aroused and Flaherty was glad. It was making his job easier.

You know what happened that Sunday afternoon at the Polo Grounds. How the Redskins turned loose a fiendish attack on the Giants, how they shook Battles loose all afternoon, how Baugh passed the Giants dizzy and how Turk Edwards all day tore out huge sections of the Giant line and blocked a punt for a touchdown, how the Redskins line that didn't belong in the same league stopped most of the Giants' plays at the line of scrimmage and how they walloped the Giants, 49-14.

Well, what we are getting around to is that out here in Chicago, with the title game with the Bears coming up Sunday, Coach Flaherty is strictly on his own. He's getting no psychological help from the Bears. In fact, canny George Halas who owns and coaches the Chicago team is making it tough on Flaherty.

'Halas Makes It Tough.

Halas heard about Owens' insults to the Redskins in New York. And so he is being very discreet in all his remarks anent the Redskins. In fact, he is not only very discreet, he is very clever about what he says.

When asked by newspapermen to select his own all-pro-league team today, the Bears' owner reflected audibly.

"You say Steve Owens didn't pick a single Washington player? And the Redskins got sore and run up that 49-14 score? . . . H-m-m. Very interesting. Here, I've got a scoop for you. I will give you my selections for the 1937 all-pro-league team. Here they are:

"Center—Kawal, Redskins.
"Right guard—Karcher, Redskins.
"Right tackle—Barber, Redskins.
"Right end—Malone, Redskins.
"Quarterback—Smith, Redskins.
"Right half—Battles, Redskins.
"Fullback—Pinckert, Redskins.

"That's the greatest football team ever put together," smiled Halas. "It's got everything—power, speed, passing, defense. My Bears really don't belong in the same league with the Redskins. I have only one more thing to add: Please see that these selections of mine get in the paper before Sunday."

Bear Facts.

Eleven players who captained their college football teams are with the Bears . . . They are: Rentner (Northwestern), Stydahar (West Virginia), Trost (Marquette), Zeller (Indiana), Carlson (Oregon State), Corbett (Millikin), Nolting (Cincinnati U.), Francis (Nebraska), Bjork (Oregon), Plasman (Vanderbilt), and Conkright (Oklahoma) . . . But Fullback John Doehring, who has been with the Bears for seven years, never played college football . . . In his first year in the pro league, after graduating from Tennessee, Beattie Feathers averaged 10 yards per push when he carried the ball for the Bears in 1934 . . . The Bears are now working on what they call a "B-B" defense . . . Translated, it means a "Baugh-Battles" defense . . . It will not be the same defense that the New York Giants used against Baugh and Battles, obviously enough . . . Bronko Nagurski's neck measures 20 inches and he can all but slip his collar over his head . . . Nine of the Bears are married and four are daddies . . . Feathers spends ten minutes before games wrapping tape around his ankles . . . Jane Fauntz, the famous swimmer, is Mrs. Ed Manske, Bears' end.

John Revolta Fires 69 for Second Spot

14-Club Limit Proves No Handicap; 200 Seek Prizes.

By Stuart Cameron.
United Press Sports Editor.

Coral Gables, Fla., Dec. 10. Sammy Snead, the smiling youngster from West Virginia's hills, played a super game of golf today to set the pace in the first round of the $10,000 Miami Biltmore Open championship.

Snead's 67, just one stroke off the competitive course record, put the hard-hitting youngster two strokes ahead of the field of 200 which embraced virtually all the big-name professionals of the Nation and many of its amateur stars.

The Biltmore Open offered the first actual competitive test of the new United States Golf Association ruling limiting a player to 14 clubs. How little the rule was likely to affect the play of the stars was shown by the fact that Snead used only 11.

Not Hurt by Rule.

"No; I guess I couldn't say the 14-club rule hurt me," Snead said. "As a matter of fact I didn't use my midiron, seven iron or spoon."

Snead was out in 34, one under par, and home in 33, three under. Nearest in pursuit was black-haired Johnny Revolta, of Chicago, former P. G. A. champion, who had 33—36—69.

Five players clipped a single stroke from par to have 70s for their initial efforts. They were Vic Ghezzi, Deal, N. J., 36—34; Pat Sawyer, Detroit, 37—33; Frank Moore, New York, 34—36; Tony Penna, Dayton, Ohio, 31—34; Jim Turnesa, Providence, R. I., 33—37.

Seven Shoot Par.

Dick Metz, of Chicago, well back on his game after his automobile accident injuries last spring, was one of seven having a par 71. He carded 37-34. This score was duplicated by big Ed Dudley of Philadelphia.

J. D. Fogarty, of Boca Grande, Fla., Ed Oliver, Wilmington, Del., and Mike Turnesa of New York, each had 34-37 for their pars, while Horton Smith of Chicago had 35-36, and Ralph Hutchinson, of Bethlehem, Pa., had 33-38.

Other "name" players were well scattered back in the pack. Tony Manero, former open champion from New York, missed par by one stroke with a 72. Lawson Little of San Francisco, former British and United States amateur champion, putted weakly for a 75.

Guldahl's Putting Off.

Ralph Guldahl, of Coral Gables, holder of the national open title and defending champion of the Biltmore crown, missed eight greens and missed two putts of less than two feet but still had a 72. This total was equalled by Jimmy Thomson of Shawnee-on-Delaware, Pa., one of the Betting favorites.

Among the others at 72 were Henry Picard, Hershey, Pa.; Paul Runyan, White Plains, N. Y.; Henry

Roosevelt Rifle Team In Final Round of Match

Eight Names Considered By Michigan

Yost Declines to Reveal Those Eligible for Kipke's Berth.

By the Associated Press.

Ann Arbor, Mich., Dec. 10.—Fielding H. Yost, athletic director at the University of Michigan, disclosed today that a "preferred list" of eight names had been compiled from which Michigan hopes to engage a new football coach.

Yost did not reveal the identities of the coaches on the list. He said that all were thoroughly experienced and appeared to have the qualities the board in control of physical education is seeking in the successor to Harry Kipke, whose contract will be allowed to lapse next June.

The list was compiled from the Nation's outstanding coaches, and men have been "semiofficially" approached, Michigan's veteran athletic director said, but added that the announcement did not preclude other applicants.

"The field is wide open," he asserted. "There are no restrictions other than that he must have a good past record, a good personality and the ability to win the respect of the men with whom he works and the players."

Yost definitely put at rest rumors that only Michigan graduates would be considered for the job by stating that if an applicant had the necessary qualifications his alma mater would not have any bearing on his chances.

From a reliable source it was learned that the names of Howard Jones, University of Southern California mentor, and Ivan Williamson, former Michigan captain, who is now an end coach at Yale, were not on the list of eight.

Yost declined to state whether the name of Charles E. (Gus) Dorais, University of Detroit's highly successful coach, was on the list.

A "Dorais boom" has been launched by alumni groups in Detroit.

Meanwhile Kipke, who guided the Wolverine football fortunes for nine years, was silent concerning his future. Yesterday he said that he had received several coaching offers and bids to enter business recently.

He has canceled all speaking engagements for the present.

Rumors of a 'Revolt' Denied Indignantly by Redskins

Chicago, Dec. 10.—Indignant at reports published in Washington of dissension and "a revolt" among the Redskins, players of the Washington team today made a formal denial in a dressing room meeting before the daily practice.

Capt. Turk Edwards, addressing the players and Washington newspapermen with the team, declared that "There has never been any dissension on the Redskins and we are 100 per cent with Coach Flaherty and the management. I am speaking for every player on the Redskin team."

The reports declared that the Redskins were dissatisfied with the way the Redskin management was arranging post-season exhibition games, holding out for higher purses when the players would have accepted less.

Coach Ray Flaherty, also addressing the players and newspapermen, declared the Redskin management "Is interested only in scheduling exhibition games that would do the players the most good."

Miami Tourney Officially Opens With Dean Absent

Coral Gables, Fla., Dec. 10 (AP).—Dizzy Dean, the Cardinal pitching ace, did not appear today for his scheduled performance as an amateur golfer in the $10,000 Miami Biltmore Open.

Dean telephoned from Bradenton, Fla., he was unable to play because Sam Breadon, owner of the Cardinals, and Branch Rickey, club vice president, arrived last night with their wives to visit him.

Dizzy said, however, he would fly here tomorrow to play Santa Claus at the Biltmore's annual Helen Lee Doherty Christmas party for underprivileged children.

Dean was to have played with Sam Byrd, of Philadelphia, former Yankee baseballer, who now is a golf pro, and Paul Waner, slugging Pirate outfielder. Byrd shot a 3-over-par 74 today and Waner, playing as an amateur, a 79.

D. C. Five Is Beaten.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Dec. 10.—The United Clay Products Co. quint of Washington was defeated here last night by the Marketeers, being the sixth straight victory for the locals. The score was 28 to 24. Fox, of Washington, with 9 points and Morin, of the locals, with 9 points led in the scoring.

British Discuss Methods to Regain Net Supremacy

London, Dec. 10 (AP).—The British Lawn Tennis Association devoted its annual session today to the discussion of ways and means of regaining the Davis and Wightman cups from the United States and control of players.

They decided "to keep amateurs from fattening on the game" by empowering the council to inspect the tournament accounts of any member club and to outline training system for young players of international potentialities.

"We are very much alive to the urgent need of leaving no stone unturned to get back these two great international trophies," said Sir Samuel Hoare, who was re-elected president.

Hoare outlined a plan of intensive training schedule for both men and women.

Braddock Pays Fine.

New York, Dec. 10 (AP).—Former Heavyweight Champion James J. Braddock and his manager, Joe Gould, each paid a fine of $1,000 today to the New York State Athletic Commission for failure to report for the Braddock-Max Schmeling title bout which was scheduled for last June 3.

Conference Avoids New Study Rule

Tighter Requirements Motion Fails When Not Seconded.

Richmond, Va., Dec. 10.—An attempt to establish a more rigid scholastic standard for athletes met with an adverse reception at the opening meeting of the sixteenth annual Southern Conference convention here today.

Dr. Julian A. Burruss, president of Virginia Tech, proposed that the 15-member conference require a varsity athlete to have passed 24 semester hours during the preceding year and all subjects in the preceding semester to be eligible.

His motion was lost for the lack of a second and the delegates moved on to other business. Later, however, Dr. Burruss questioned the procedure which had eliminated the proposal without an opportunity for debate and Athletic Director Branch Bocock, of William and Mary came to his support and said he would second the motion if it were again brought before the conference.

May Reconsider.

Dean W. H. Wannamaker, of Duke, conference president, said he would again entertain the V. P. I. motion later in the convention.

Another major matter which remained on the docket when the delegates took intermission for a banquet early tonight was Virginia Tech's proposal to eliminate most of the conference rules governing financial assistance, scholarships and jobs for athletes.

The conference opened its two-day session by rejecting a Clemson proposal that District of Columbia colleges be classified as outside of conference territory. Geary Eppley, Maryland athletic director, opposed the measure, saying that the Washington schools were "working into the southern conference plan and their retention in the area will be beneficial to athletics in the area."

Regulations of the loop now forbid conference teams from playing any schools of equal athletic rank within the circuit area which do not subscribe to conference eligibility requirements. Jess Neely, Clemson coach, said there had been some demand from alumni of that institution that Clemson play in Washington and that this was made difficult because of the rule. The vote was 9 to 6.

Cannot Enforce Rule.

Another Clemson proposal that the use of moving picture cameras at games be restricted to the two competing schools was passed 8 to 6 with Maryland not voting. Washington and Lee led the objectors with Forest Fletcher, athletic director and former conference president, saying "it is another one of those things we cannot enforce."

Maryland's effort to eliminate the conference rule declaring ineligible for intercollegiate boxing any athlete who had received compensation, including expenses, was lost by a close 8-7 ballot. Eppley contended that the measure was unfair to "unsuspecting boys who as members of a boy's club or similar organization" received carfare or expenses in going to meet another club.

The most spirited debate was provoked by proposals of Duke and Maryland aimed to amplify the regulations covering college athletes playing with other teams.

The measure as finally approved read: "A student who, while the college is in session, plays on an athletic team other than that of his college, becomes ineligible for intercollegiate contests in the sport concerned for a period of one year from the date of the infraction."

Plan to Overwhelm Bears Through Air

Flaherty Predicts Free-Scoring Game and Wants to Be on Big End; Bears to Use Orthodox Six-Man Line in Game.

By Shirley Povich.
A Staff Correspondent.

Chicago, Dec. 10.—The strategy that Head Coach Ray Flaherty has designed for his Redskins in their bid for the National League football title on Sunday today began to unfold itself on the frozen turf of Wrigley Field.

There, where he turned out his athletes for a lengthy practice session amid the biting blasts off the lake front, Flaherty tipped his hand. The Redskins on Sunday will not dally when they get possession of the ball.

The power of the Bears' attack Flaherty justly fears. The Redskins' coach is convinced that it will be a free-scoring game—that one or two touchdowns will not win it. The Washington team will be shooting for a gob of scores.

Thus it was that for a full hour today Slingin' Sammy Baugh stood out in the wintry scene and pegged his passes to Redskin ends and Redskin backs. Baugh and Battles—they will be carrying the load for the Washington team against the Bears, and Flaherty is prepared to let them run and pass to the hilt.

Long and Short Ones.

Today Baugh was throwing long ones and he was throwing short ones. He whipped 'em and he flipped 'em and usually he was hanging 'em on a peg for the receivers. On Sunday it wil be Baugh and Battles, Battles and Baugh, operating behind that Redskin line, in an effort not to score a touchdown or two, but to overwhelm the Bears.

Against the Chicago team, Flaherty realizes he will be operating against no five-man line, such as the Giants featured. It is orthodox football that the Bears play and the Redskins have been forced to revert to their early season tactics. Against the six and seven man lines of other clubs in the league, the Redskins have been no great shucks with a running attack.

Flaherty knows, too, that on Sunday the Redskins' defense will be faced with its hardest task of the season. The Bears, with ball carriers of the ilk of Nagurski, Nolting and Feathers, also happen to be the blockingest outfit in the league. When not carrying the ball, Nagurski is a riot in cleats. And when he does carry the ball, he will have such as Jack Manders and Ray Nolting as his backfield blockers.

Like the Redskins, the Bears feature both passing and power in their attack. In the capable Ray Buivid to fire the passes, the Chicago club boasts a chucker who, in college ranks, was rated second only to Baugh. And, for the first time this season, the Redskins will be facing the "T" formation.

The Bears' attack operates from the indirect pass from center with the quarterback, usually Bernie Masterson, taking the snap-back and handing the ball to the runner. From that position, Masterson also fakes, runs the ball himself or starts the Bears' famed reverses which send Nagurski or Manders or Nolting through the tackles.

More Chalk Talks.

Ofttimes shifting into an unbalanced line, the Bears shift their tackles, Stydahar and Thompson, side by side and run their plays through that sector. When Stydahar and Thompson are charging alongside each other they represent a total poundage of 378.

To meet the new style of the Bears' attack, Flaherty is again resorting to the frequent blackboard drills and "chalk talks" which he credits with much of the success of the Redskins' battle against the Giants. Morning and evening, between workouts on the field, Flaherty goes into session with his athletes in these skull drills.

Chicago promised little relief from the current cold spell and Sunday's game will be played in the same frigid atmosphere that has prevailed all week. In a long-distance forecast, the weather officials predicted that the temperature on Sunday would be 4 degrees above zero. The cold spell has served to slow advance seat sales and a capacity crowd of 42,000 is not yet assured, but a let-up in the freeze tomorrow would send sales rocketing. A $90,000 pot for the game is indicated.

Flaherty Concocts New Tricks to Baffle Bears

Famed for the tricks he has used with much success all season, Coach Ray Flaherty, has equipped his Washington Redskins with a new set of hocus-pocus plays for Sunday's championship game with the Bears.

With nothing more to hide from the eyes of prying scouts inasmuch as Sunday's battle will be the season's finale, Flaherty has spent much time in secret drill with the Redskins since their arrival in Chicago. The tip is out that the Washington team will have something new on Sunday.

The Redskins startled the league a month ago when Flaherty's team pulled the hidden ball trick on the kick-off which saw tackle Turk Edwards nearly make a touchdown on the play. Only a penalty on the play nullified a 30-yard gain against the Packers when, on a shift play, guard Les Olsson became eligible and took a pass from Riley Smith.

Last Sunday in New York, the Redskins scored on another trick play—a fake placement kick on which the ball was snapped directly to Riley Smith who threw a pass over the goal line to Wayne Millner.

In practices here, Flaherty has equipped the Redskins with a play that gives Sammy Baugh the option of passing or running after receiving the snap from center. Baugh is not expected to break clear if he runs the ball, but Flaherty believes him certain to make lengthy gains.

Among the 42,000 who are expected to be in the stands on Sunday will be one person with an especial interest in the Redskins' Cliff Battles. She is Mrs. Cliff Battles, his recent bride, who arrived in Chicago today.

The Redskins in general have a justifiable complaint against Chicago newspapers. According to the public prints here, the Washington team is comprised of Cliff Battles and Sammy Baugh. The pair have been photographed posing with everything but a bear rug.

The names of the ten 1937 collegians whom the Redskins will win in the draft for duty next year will be known tomorrow afternoon when the lists are submitted at league headquarters here. Chapman, University of California back, is the No. 1 choice on the Redskins' list.

Kutztown Wins 58-23 Decision Over Teachers

Kutztown, Pa., Dec. 10.—Wilson Teachers College fell before Kutztown State Teachers College here today, 58-23, in the opening game of the season for both teams. The game was rough from start to finish.

Ted Lewis, guard, was high scorer for the Wilsonites with two field goals and a foul toss.

Seabiscuit Scratched In Tanforan's Stake

San Francisco, Dec. 10 (AP).—Because the Tanforan track board of stewards refused to reinstate Jockey Jack (Red) Pollard, Seabiscuit, leading money winner of the year, was withdrawn today from the $10,000 added handicap, to be run December 18.

Pollard was grounded for rough riding tactics last Wednesday.

Western Quintet Tops Georgetown Prep, 33-22

Making their initial appearance of the season, Western High School's courtmen, public high school champions, defeated Georgetown Prep, 32-22, in a fast game yesterday at Garrett Park. It was the "Little Hoyas'" first defeat in four games. Tommy Saylor and Irving Needle led Western's attack.

Kipke's Dismissal Greatest Surprise of Gridiron Year

By Paul Mickelson.
Associated Press Sports Writer.

New York, Dec. 10.—Putting two and two together between glimpses at the incoming mail:

Fired—Big time college football coaches expected almost anything to happen this winter except the dismissal of Harry Kipke at Michigan. Harry correctly guessed what his team would do last fall and then got the gate. "I'd have been as much surprised if they'd bounced Stub Allison of California," says Columbia Lou Little. "Seems as soon as a fellow's named head of the National Football Coaches' Association he gets fired. Pray for me. I get that job two years from now and my contract's up the same time I take office."

The general guess is Kipke quarreled with Fielding "Hurry Up" Yost who got him his job. It is doubtful whether Kipke keeps on coaching. He doesn't want to leave his new Ann Arbor, Mich., home and he has a couple of good business offers which would give him just as much money and not so many headaches. The saddest part of the Kipke story is that Michigan didn't hold up the announcement of his dismissal until he had finished his banquet tour, which included a Michigan Alumni dinner at New York tonight.

And yet some people insist college football coaches are over-paid for their heartaches and headaches.

Victory—The sports staff of the Crescent, student paper at Evansville, Ind., College, wires that Evansville College can't get shut out all the time. The Evansvilles failed to score a football point all fall but their basketball team trimmed Oakland City, Ind., College, 39-37. It was Evansville's twelfth straight victory over the Oaks, whose football star is much lower than that of the Evansvilles. The Oaks haven't won a gridiron battle for three unhappy years and finally have decided to give up football because they can't get enough men for the squad.

Fore—Sparrow Ramsay, bantamweight publicity champion of Miami, nominates Jimmy Thomson as the heir apparent to Ralph Guldahl's golf throne. The blonde siege gun, writes the Sparrow, has had his game overhauled by Tom Armour, the cagey Silver Scot, and has cut his score from two to three shots per round. Incidentally, we hear Guldahl's condition is no joke. The open champ hasn't looked so hot since his recent operation and will surprise everybody if he comes anywhere near his great showing of 1937. Col. Henry Doherty, sponsor of the current $10,000 Miami Biltmore Open, now leads all pro golf angels. To date, he has put up $95,000 for tournaments. Horton Smith has won the largest share of it—$4,425.

Proving ground — Mr. Lloyd Pierce, of Carson-Newman College, winner of the Smoky Mountain Conference football title two years in a row, would like to know if any small college ever turned out as many good coaches as his little college located in the foothills of eastern Tennessee. Among the famed coaches who came from Carson-Newman are Bernie Moore, L. S. U.; Dana X. Bible, Texas; Lake Russell, Mercer, and Sam Holt, who is doing a great job for his "alma mammy." "Frosty" Holt's Carson-Newman teams have been beaten only once in three years of conference competition—some record.

Mountain news—Sports Editor Bus Fisher, of the Parkersburg (W. Va.) News, who also serves as president of the West Virginia Sports Writers Association, sends an invitation for the north and south high school football game at Charleston, W. Va., New Year's Day. That game is a paradise for College coaches as 44 of the finest prep senior players in the State meet in a game and the coaches pick what they believe to be the cream of the crop. It's really a harvest because many of the Nation's greatest pigskin heroes come from West Virginia.

Fisher also writes that sad Sam Jones, old American League pitching star, is in a big dither. He wants his son to play baseball but the son's love for football and basketball threatens to spoil it all . . . Nicknames stick in West Virginny. When they were kids, Earl Neale, now assistant coach at Yale, called Bryan Rittenhouse, his chum, "Dirty." Rittenhouse called Neale "Greasy." Both still carry the nicknames. Rittenhouse lives in Parkersburg.

Eblis Wins Charles Town Feature Race, Pays Backers $47.40 Mutuel

5,000 See Break Aid Long Shot

Escapes Interference at Start; Second Place to Cloudy Weather.

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent.

Charles Town Race Track, W. Va., Dec. 10.—Escaping interference at the start that all but piled up the field, Eblis, a veteran son of Diavolo, sprang a surprise today by romping off with the Skyline Drive Purse featured event of today's program here in the mountains. Taking full advantage of the break that hampered at least three of his seven rivals Eblis was powerfully handled by Jockey Manny Berg and came down to the wire a length in advance of Cloudy Weather with Sea Dove third.

Berg lost his hat in the final drive but many of the crowd of 5,000 lost their shirts when the favorite, Timber Lady, failed to get even a peek at the money. Eblis was the second longest shot in the race and brought his backers a $47.40 mutuel.

Old Veteran was the principal cause of the poor start. He must have thought he was Cliff Battles for he tried to do some broken field running and bumped and knocked Sea Dove, Showabal and others. He finished a far-back last but his beginning tactics were prominent in the final result.

Anybody's Race.

From the first turn to the wire it was anybody's race and to Eblis' credit is the fact that he kept driving, forged to the front along the backstretch and then withstood all efforts to dislodge him.

Jockey Faust who rode Cloudy Weather made a futile claim of foul but the "official sign" was soon on display.

Two old Charles Town favorites, Bromide and Toothpick, were on the winning ends of the daily double races. This pair produced a $32.60 pay-off.

After trying all year, Moths Wing finally graduated from the maiden ranks in the first race. The John P. Grier filly turned back six others of her sex in a test of four and one-half furlongs, winning by a scant margin over Dixie S. while performing in the colors of Mrs. K. N. Gilpin, Brain Child was a close third. Moths Wing paid a $6.40 mutuel, with Dixie S the favorite.

Bromide made good with speed to spare for the favorite players in the second race. The veteran son of Brooms had no trouble under the guidance of Freddy Faust, the Washington jockey, and won by four lengths. Assist and San Pietro chased the winner to the wire. A pay-off of $3.80 was in order.

Toothpick Wins 3d Race.

Trainer Don Yates was in his glory in the third race. He saddled Toothpick for E. Leonard and the three year old filly won at an $8.20 price tag. With T. E. Ward doing the riding, Toothpick ran Disown into defeat and then drove home to hold Miss Epe safe.

Idle Miss, owned and trained by B. F. Christmas, won the fifth race by five lengths from Tuleyries Star, with Trixie Lass third. Easter Hatter fell at the first turn and injured Jockey Mike Mitchell. Running fourth at the time, Easter Hatter interferred with horses behind him and the race was run in two sections thereafter. Whizzaway became uncontrollable after the spill and apprentice Jockey R. Conner jumped off. Idle Miss paid a $8.40 mutuel. The winner's time of 1:24 3-5 broke the track record by four fifths of a second.

Bright Light, cast off by the Shandon Farm because he would not break, was off good today and toyed with seven others to win the sixth race in the colors of Claude Feltner. Red Label and Last Scamp chased the $13.20 winner to the wire. Bright Light paid $8.80 to place and $12.40 to show.

Fife, at $7.20 won the seventh race by three and a half lengths from Double Finesse and Sea Finn.

Australians Beat Budge and Mako In Tourney Finals

Melbourne, Dec. 10 (AP).—Jack Crawford and Vivian McGrath, of Australia, today defeated Donald Budge and Gene Mako, of the United States, 1—8, 6—3, 6—4, 7—3, in the men's doubles final of the Victorian tennis tournament.

Budge had shoulder trouble, which prevented him from serving at a fast pace. McGrath was the outstanding player.

Adrian Quist and Donald Durnbull, defending titleholders, were eliminated in an early round.

Budge teamed with Dorothy May Bundy, of Santa Monica, Calif., to win the mixed doubles final, 6—3, 3—6, 6—4, from Jack Crawford and Thelma Coyne, of Australia. The Australian team of Mrs. Harry Hopman and Nancy Wynne scored a 7—5, 6—1 victory over Joan Hartigan and Miss Coyne to take the women's doubles title.

WITH BILL BENNINGS

Selections at Charles Town.

Dear Al:

This track offers a good week-end card, as good as could be formed with the horses available. The feature, drawing a limit field of eight, has been named The Waterford in nonor of the floods at Bowie, Marlboro and Laurel and the cloudbursts at Delaware Park and Belair last summer and fall. The race, at 7 furlongs, might have been named the Charles Town Championship Handicap. The Gilpin-Pike entry of Teddy's Star and Kenty probably will be the favorite but they will have to have their running shoes on, for B. F. Christmas has his formidable pair of Cloudy Weather, winner of three straight here, and Sunned ready for best efforts. Washington will be represented by C. E. George's Postponement while Timber Lady, Frederick and Silent Shot complete the lineup. The battle is for a $1,000 purse. Seven other races are on the program and with long "also eligible" lists, capacity fields are assured. With fair weather promised, the track hopes to play host to one of its largest December crowds. The track here continues to be fast. If some one had wanted to tell me that Charles Town would have more fast tracks than Laurel, I would have told them they were crazy. However, that is the case. This track is rather hard which accounts for the defeat of many horses who appeared to like the Bowie oval, a soft course. If the mud comes up, many horses will turn a form flip-flop. Today there wasn't a cloud in the sky.

BILL.

First race—Can Bloom is at home on this course and ran a fair race last out. Needs only the right ride. Scout Allow had some good races and is a threat. Philigal could awake with a bang in a field of this sort.

Second race—Queen Vic gets in light, thanks to the apprentice allowance, and appears to be the class of this field. Blind Talk has worked well and is dangerous. Super Calendar had a flash of early speed at Bowie, and may take third money here.

Third race—Hard Chase may be the right one in this rather open event; runs honest races and gets in with light weight. Dark Mission is better than generally rated and is a possibility. Miss Toucan to take care of the others.

Fourth race—Pansy's Best has speed and courage; likes this distance and may take the big end of the purse. French Trap was in trouble last out and deserves attention. Golden Vein packs big weight and may not like the turns here.

Fifth race—Ney Nay, a winner here, may hold these sprinters safe. Jack Greenock has much speed from a slow beginning last out and could take it all at generous odds. Adriatic won his last, but packs on weight.

Sixth race—Kenty appears to be the best of the day; needs only to run his race to take down the major award. Postponement was backing out of the gate last out when the start came; with a good getaway this one may surprise. Cloudy Weather and Sunned to battle it out for the show.

Seventh race—Victory Miss shapes up as a fair betting proposition in this event; likes the course and may lead the formidable Jobakheta to the wire. Departed should take down part of the money.

Eighth race—James Boy and Jim Brown will battle it out in the day's finale and I'm forced to give the first named the edge. Jimmy D. for the minor cash.

Ninth race—if this substitute event is used, I'll take Luculent, Captain Bill and Taipan.

Best bet—Kenty.

Max and Thomas Not 'Powder Puffers.'

By Jack Cuddy.

Copyright, 1937, by the United Press.

New York, Dec. 10.—Battle of the beetle brows:

Max Schmeling and Harry Thomas have one thing in common. Both look like neanderthal men—because of the balconies of hammered bone that terminate their foreheads and jut out above their eyes. And both are primitive brawlers although both have a high inteligence quotient.

When these two men climb through the ropes at Madison Square Garden Monday night for their 15-round bout, the spectators will witness a throw-back to the cave-man days in physical encounter. Because neither is a "fancy dan" boxer—neither is a powder-puff puncher who depends upon his speed and cleverness to outpoint the other.

Strange though it may seem, there is no actual relativity between ringcraft and intelligence outside the ring. Some of the worst oafs that ever tossed leathe., proved themselves unusually intelligent outside the ring, whereas some of the most brilliant boxers were complete numskulls when they cut the tape off their fists.

Gene Tunney, retired heavyweight champion, says that Schmeling is "the best right-handed heavyweight I ever saw, but his mental reactions in the ring are slow and he is not a gifted boxer. He is a fighter of the bruiser type, who maneuvers about until his opponent is in position for Maxie to send in that deadly right—just like the primitive man would send in the death stroke at an animal or an enemy."

But—when you meet the grim-visaged, bettle-browed Schmeling outside the ring you must admire Maxie's native intelligence. Here is a dark German from Hamburg who was smart enough to hoard his ring earnings, capitalize upon his ring prowess, marry the most beautiful movie actress in Germany, Anny Ondra, and settle down as a gentleman farmer and hunter on his estate at Bad Saarow. He serves as the living example of Aryan supremacy in the land of the swastika.

Schmeling of the bettle brow and primitive right hand was smart enough to realize the latest possibilities in his own body and make a comeback after he lost the world heavyweight championship to Jack Sharkey—even after he had been knocked out by Maxie Baer and after he had been beaten by Steve Hamas. Where other men might have believed that they were relegated to the pugilistic scrap heap, Schmeling's extra ring intelligence made him carry on in a campaign that led to triumphs over Hamas, in a return match; Walter Neusel—and then Joe Louis.

Schmeling's analysis of Louis in training for the Paulino fight and his study of the Baer-Louis movies gave him a road map to a knock-out victory over the Brown Bomber—a victory that made him the world's No. 1 heavyweight challenger. Although circumstances held the Teuton Schlager idle for 18 long months and prevented a title meeting with Braddock, he was smart enough to keep in shape for "Der Tag" when he would tangle with someone for the crown. Realizing that there is no substitute for competition, Herr Maxie decided to get a couple of "tune-up" bouts under his belt before meeting the Bomber for the title in June. His first warm-up opponent is Thomas.

This Thomas fellow—like Maxie—is quite primordial in the ring, although outside he is one of the most intelligent and well spoken fellows you can meet. Thomas, the bulldog of Eagle Bend, Minn., is physically a six-foot bundle of muscle—a fine athlete—who fights like a cave man. This sandy-haired former collegian, former football player, former professional baseball catcher, hews to no rules of the ring when he starts throwing punches. He is more like a street brawler than any fighter of prominence who has come along in years. Anything goes: elbows, glove heels and forehead—as he fights.

Thomas, at 27, believes in being able to take anything that the other man can throw—and then dish out the most punishment. But Schmeling's credo is passive resistance—avoiding punishing blows—until the opening is presented when he can crush an opponent with that smashing right fist.

Schmeling agreed to Thomas, in the first place, because he thought the Minnesota battler was a palooka. Now he finds that he is up against a strong opponent. Moreover, the reporters have acquainted Schmeling with the fact that he is fighting his 13th bout on American soil on December 13th—and that his tune-up may prove a tragic "taps." But Moxie is not superstitious. He is too intelligent for that. He sharpened his right hand. He will toss it Monday night. And he says, "let the chips fall where they may."

Wilson Schedules 18 Court Games

Western Tank Team Defeats Poly, 41 to 25

Wilson Surprises, Holds Y.M.C.A. Natators to 38-30 Decision.

Western High School opened its swimming schedule with an impressive victory over the highly touted Baltimore Poly High School team at the Y.M.C.A. pool yesterday afternoon. The score was 41 to 25.

Displaying a surprisingly well-balanced team, the Western lads held their own in the individual events, and then came through with victories in both teams relays to register a well-deserved win.

Wilson Surprises.

Wilson High Schools team earned a moral victory, bowing to the District champions, 30 to 38 in a thrilling duel.

Trailing by a single point going into the final event, the Wilson lads were unable to cope with the pace set by the veterans, Boggs and Schmitt, two of the District's ace swimmers.

Georgia Swamps Miami in Finale

Miami, Fla., Dec. 10 (AP).—The University of Georgia presented retiring Coach Harry Mehre with a 20-0 victory over the University of Miami tonight before a stadium dedicating crowd of 14,625.

The Bulldogs, who dedicated this final game to Coach Mehre, struck for touchdowns on three sensational pass plays and scored a fourth after a long punt return that set it up. Late in the game, Miami moved 84 yards only to lose the ball by a fumble on top of Georgia's goal.

A Miami boy, Knox Eldredge provided a dramatic touch by scoring the first Georgia touchdown. He took a lateral pass from Capt. Bill Hartman, who had caught a 21-yard aerial from Bill Hunnicutt, and dashed 23 yards to score.

Gallaudet Loses To Southeastern

With Forward Paul Madden socking the mesh for eight baskets, Southeastern University's basketball team easily won its opening start of the season last night, defeating Gallaudet, 28-21, in the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium.

The winners led all the way, having a 11-4 advantage at half time. Despite the closeness of score, Southeastern was not pressed and Coach Bill Woodward sent in a flock of reserves in the last quarter to test players in preparation for a meeting with Mount St. Mary's tonight at Emmitsburg, Md.

Leading scorers for the losers were Racy Drake and Bob Zimmerman, both making 7 points.

When Football Wolves Howl, Bierman Can Go to Sewanee

By the United Press.

Chicago, Dec. 10.—If the football wolves begin to howl at Minnesota, Bernie Bierman can escape to little Sewanee University, where they've "got to have a big football team, and money's no object."

So far the silver-haired Minnesota coach apparently has his critics well in hand, but so did Harry Kipke while Michigan was on top of the heap.

Walter V. Fort, a slim Texan, who once played fullback at Sewanee, weighing only 139 pounds, guaranteed Bierman's football future today by offering the Gopher chief a coaching job at Sewanee, Tenn., on a ten-year basis.

"We want a football team down there, and money's no object," drawled the Texan, who said he represented a group of wealthy alumni. "We can match the salary he could get anywhere."

Sewanee, sometimes called the "University of the South," has an enrollment of only 250. Seventeen men reported to Coach Heck Clark, and, with this handful, Clark played all the big teams of the South. He won two, lost seven.

"Clark did a wonderful job with the men he had," Fort said. "Nobody could have done better. But if we could get Bierman's word that he'll come down there in a year or two we'll have some good players for him to work with. Then we'd go to town."

MASS. BOXER SLIPS TO CANVAS IN JOEY ARCHIBALD FIGHT.

Turner Signs Grimes, Crow

Buddy Grimes, veteran Norfolk featherweight, who is the only man to go the distance with Joey Archibald since Joey started his local winning rampage, meets Augie Crow, of Baltimore, in a 6-rounder on next Monday night's boxing card at Turner's Arena.

Headlining the card are Tony Dupre, Manchester battler, and Lou Gevinson, local southpaw, who clash in a 10-rounder.

Added to the card yesterday were Benny Kessler and Doug Swetnam, who meet in a 4-rounder.

Lou Camps, topnotch New York featherweight, who decisioned Archibald last April a year ago, and Joey Temes, the Greek Bulldog, have been matched for an 8-round semi-windup. Camps, a former New York and Chicago Golden Gloves champion, has lost but five fights in some 40 matches since turning pro.

Meanwhile Gevinson continued his workouts yesterday at the National Guard Armory. He must weigh 130 pounds or less by 2 p. m., Monday.

Northwestern Alumni Honor Schoolboy Gridmen at Fete

Washington Chapter's Meeting Attended by Col. John J. Wigmore, Former Law School Dean; Football Movies Enliven Session.

Ten all-high school gridmen and coaches from local public high schools were among the guests last night at a banquet given by the Washington chapter of Northwestern University alumni at the American Association of University Women Club.

Courtland D. Ferguson, president of the local chapter was host and among the prominent alumni who attended were Congressman Ralph F. Church, from Evanston, Illinois, and wife; Colonel John J. Wigmore, internationally known scholar and for years dean of the Northwestern Law School; Fred D. Fagg, Jr., Director of the Bureau of Air Commerce, and wife and George E. Farrell, Director of the Western Division of the Agriculture Adjustment Administration.

The coachse were Hardy Peace, Central; W. Dove Thompson, Tech; Carl Heintel, Woodrow Wilson; Lynn Woodworth, Roosevelt, and Arthur Boyd, Eastern. The players were Bill Ickes, Kenny Herbert and Charles Jones, of Central; Eddie Vasvary and Joe Kolker, of Roosevelt; Paul Kober, Zeke Clift and Robert Stange, of Eastern; Jack Belote, of Tech, and Johnny Stevens, of Wilson.

Preceding the dinner, Ferguson, acting as master of ceremonies, introduced the coaches, players and several of the Northwestern alumni, over the radio. Clark was the guest speaker. He discussed football at Northwestern, and expressed delight at his presence among the young football players, saying it reminded him of his undergraduate days at the university.

There were also short speeches by the coaches, Representative Church, some of the players and alumni. A film depicting the Northwestern-Michigan footoball game, was shown as the high light of the entertainment.

Snead Leads

Shute, Coral Gables, and Harry Cooper, Chicopee, Mass.

Snead had just one serious lapse, three-putting the sixth from 24 feet. However, he sank a 21-footer at the seventh and a perfect approach at the first left him one under par 36 at the turn.

He had three birdies on the back stretch. One came at the eleventh, where he sank a tricky 20-foot putt. A 120-yard niblick at the seventeenth rimmed the cup and forced him to be content with a birdie instead of an eagle. In a trap at the home hole he exploded within 3 feet to get a birdie 4.

Thomson Used Nine Clubs.

Although the stars have for weeks been arguing the merits and defects of the 14-club rule, the concensus tonight was that it made no real difference in anyone's game. Jimmy Thomson used only 9 clubs, and Horton Smith used only 12.

A special checker was on duty at the starting tee to count the clubs. Only one had more than 14. He was Ralph Hathaway, of Binghamton, N. Y., wh discovered the error and sent one club back to his locker. Several players found they had short-handled chippers inadvertently left in the bags, so they checked them with the starter.

V. M. I. Is Voted Terps Toughest Opponent of '37

College Park, Md., Dec. 10 (AP).—The University of Maryland's varsity football team, which won eight of its ten games this season, today voted Virginia Military Institute, one of the teams Maryland defeated, its toughest opponent.

Florida, also beaten by the Terps, ranked next in line.

Two V. M. I. players, Paul Shu, a halfback, and Gray, at guard, drew berths on Maryland's all-opponents team. Glickman, of Syracuse, quarterback; Mayberry, Florida, halfback, and Conell, of Penn, at fullback, made up the rest of the all-opponent backfield.

The Marylanders voted Shuker, of Georgetown, as the other "best" guard; Shinn, of Penn, and Koscis, of Florida, in the tackle berths; Enders, Penn State, center, and Snyder, Georgetown, and Lesh, Western Maryland, ends.

Rival Local All-Star Teams Oppose in Scrimmage Today

The greatest assortment of all-high football material ever banded together locally gets its severest test today in preparation for its intersectional Capital Bowl schoolboy classic with Monroe, Ga., A. and M. in Catholic University bowl, December 19, at 2 o'clock.

In Central High School Stadium today at 2 o'clock scholastic stars working out at Western High School under the coaching of Dan Ahearn, Artie Boyd, Orrel Mitchell and Johnny Baker are to scrimmage the Central High School representation directed by Hardy Pearce, Johnny Baker and Eugene Augusterfer.

Approximately 60 players representing some 16 schools will be bearing down with their very best today, hopeful of qualifying for outstanding for consideration in the final selection of teams to oppose Monroe here.

Central's group, employing the single wing back, will number players representing Central, Washington and Lee, Tech, Gonzaga, George Washington High, Roosevelt and St. John's while Western, using the double wing back, features representatives of Western, Eastern, Devitt, Bullis, Landon, Georgetown Prep, Anacostia and Woodrow Wilson.

Realizing that today's scrimmage provides them with an excellent chance to impress the coaches who early next week will select the teams in the sequence they are to oppose Monroe, every man on both squads will be bearing down every minute.

Central scholastics yesterday received something of a thrill when Tuffy Leemans, former George Washington University star now performing with the New York Giants, attended their workout in company with Ben Plotnicki and Jean Sexton. Leemans appeared greatly impressed with the class of the schoolboys in general and the work of Jack Belote, great Tech tripple threat, in particular.

The sale of student tickets at 50 cents each will be launched in the high schools Monday by Sylvan King, in charge of scholastic activities, and tickets otherwise may be had at Sidney Lust's Earle Theater office, room 620; Archie Engel's, 1416 F street northwest, and National and Capital theaters. They are priced at $1.00 general admission and $1.25 for reserved seats.

Rally Near Finish Gives Joey Victory

Frenchman Is Rugged; 1,200 See Bout; Joe Green Is Victor.

By Bob Garrison.

Boxing and 1,200 persons came to the Rialto Theater last night—and so did Joey Archibald.

Plush-cushioned chassis and indirect lighting effects gave a modernistic touch to fistiana, but once "Jumpin' Joey," the Providence pounder, went into action it was the same old story.

He ushered in the town's new fight house and has a unanimous decision over Lemuel "Biff" Lemieux, New Bedford, Mass., featherweight, for his efforts. It was the first time in eight local fights that an opponent has gone 10 rounds with the conqueror of Lou Gevinson.

It was a good fight. Lemieux called Joey's hand at every turn.

He wasn't as fast as Joey, could not match power with him and was tied up every time he began to show an offensive.

Before the eighth round, however, it was still doubtful if Joey was going to win. His fast finish that saw him land three to one in the in-fighting and score with a trip-hammer left proved the margin of victory. Several times Joey was tagged with Lemieux's short right hand cross, and in the seventh Joey actually was slowed up with a dynamiting uppercut that Biff sneaked in as they broke from a clinch.

Biff tried hard all the way and in so doing gave Joey the hardest fight he has had in his eight local appearances. He entered the ring with a swollen eye and showed clever defensive ability by protecting it from Archibald's blows throughout. Joey is still the best featherweight in these parts.

Strazzeri Wins Decision.

A shell-like defense and a pounding right hand won a split decision for Tony Strazzeri, Philadelphia lightweight, who was awarded an 8-round verdict over Jackie Carter, Pittsburgh, in the semi-windup.

Tony stayed within his shell for the first three rounds, awaiting openings that would give him his target. And in the sixth round, after Carter had tried in vain to score with many blows, he left himself open and Tony found the range.

He caught Jackie flush on the jaw with a right and when Carter tied him up, he tagged him with stiff lefts and rights to the head. Jackie staggered and reeled but fighting instinct saved him as he back-pedaled the remainder of the round to weather the storm. Tony had all the better of it in a toe to toe exchange of blows in the last round.

In what proved to be six rounds of jab and slug, every other round being devoted to first one then the other, Joey Green, Washington boy, won a unanimous decision from Billy Temes, another local product. They were lightweights.

Outpunches Foe.

Green was the winner all the way, matching Temes' slugging and outpunching him in every round. Temes carried a cocked right throughout the bout, but Green tied him up whenever he took aim and peppered his face with stinging lefts to pile up an advantage.

Johnny Compo, Hartford, Conn., featherweight, was awarded a technical knockout over Mal Deshoun, of Baltimore, in the third round, of a bout scheduled for six. Compo started slowly, took everything his free swinging opponent had to offer, then opened an attack of his own.

It was a series of sharp rights to the heart that caused Referee Denny Hughes to stop the bout after 2 minutes and 45 seconds. Deshoun had been saved by the bell in the second, and was on the floor for the third time in that round when the bout was halted to insure him against further punishment.

Danny Walker, Joe Dundee's protege from Baltimore, won a 4-round preliminary from Jackie Mathews, Richmond lightweight. Mathews hit the canvas in every round and never was able to solve Walker's southpaw stance.

Palace Comedy In Color Wins Rating at Top

Lombard and March Head Unbeatable Cast in 'Nothing Sacred.'

"NOTHING SACRED." United Artists picturization of a story by James H. Street, adapted to the screen by Ben Hecht, with music by Raymond Scott Quintet, co-starring Carole Lombard and Fredric March, with Charles Winninger, Walter Connolly, Sig Rumann, Frank Fay, Maxie Rosenbloom, Alex Echsenberg, Maxie Wooley, Alex Novinsky, Margaret Hamilton, Troy Brown, Hattie McDaniels, Katherine Shelton, Olin Hoagland, Ben Morgan, Hans Steinke, George Chandler, Claire Du Brey and Nora Cecil. Directed by William Wellman. Reviewed Friday evening by Mary Morris. At the Palace Theater.

Something is sacred in "Nothing Sacred." Very sacred. It is seriousness, which is so sacred that it never intrudes for a split second into the fastest-rolling comedy that has spun out of Hollywood in this year of comedies.

While the story and its dialogue by the indestructible Mr. Ben Hecht are of the never-miss-fire variety, such gifted exponents of lunacy as Carole Lombard, Walter Connolly and Frederic March were needed to bring into full bloom this epic of Manhattan newspaper "promotion," promotion being the nice name for it.

Carole plays a dear little girl dying of radium poisoning, whom the New York Star brings to Manhattan to show a good time before she dies. In other words, the idea is to build up the paper's circulation on Carole's breakdown.

The catch in this is that Carole hasn't got radium poisoning at all, but that she really has a terrific yen to do up Manhattan. How the dear little martyr gets Broadway to weeping into its bubble water, Star Newspaperman Frederic March to fall in love with her, accumulates some terrific hangovers, tries a fake suicide, is unmasked as a fake by medical experts—all this, and more is unwound in shining and explosive entertainment.

Connally at his Best.

Though Carole Lombard has never been better, indeed, we think never so good; though Fredric March shows in his most fascinating and hot-tempered colors, still the revered Walter Connolly furnishes forth equally distinguished play-acting and as many laughs as the stars. The smugness, the icy rage, the genteel hypocrisy of Mr. Connolly are all above criticism. But most truly diverting of the manifold Connolly moods was that of downright despair and agony which descended upon him with the news that his great promotion feature, Hazel Flagg (meaning Carole Lombard), was an unmitigated little fake.

Another vintage gift to the cast is Charles Winninger, a dear but alcoholic old doctor who helps Hazel's fakery until the German experts stick their long noses into affairs.

Find of the production is, just guess! no one else but "Slapsie Maxie" Rosenbloom. Maxie may not slap 'em around so much in the ring any more, but as a slugger from the Star's circulation department, he does a mighty sweet piece of acting.

Color Adds Much.

The Technicolor of "Nothing Sacred" adds to the general impression that color is soon going to be obligatory in all pictures. It brings out the color and charm of Carole Lombard as never before, the New York skyline becomes more than a silhouette, and the matter of interior decoration adds real charm—and all this without harsh or unreal coloring.

With its feature so laugh-packed, the Palace management has shown rare good judgment in making both its shorts serious ones. The first is "The Man In the Barn," a fine semi-historical subject, something in the tempo of the "March of Time," while "Give Till It Hurts" unveils the methods of charity charlatans. The newsreel gives the latest from China.

In offering "Nothing Sacred," the Palace management gives a real challenge to that pre-Christmas slackness in movie-going. Our advice is: to forget Aunt Minnie's hankies, if you must, but never fail to take in "Nothing Sacred."

Trans-Lux

Now, it being the last lap in this our year of 1937 the Trans-Lux Theater is doing itself proud with a swell show and fine business. It is difficult to say which is the greater feature of this unusual news display—"The Human Heart" in the "March of Time" or the outstanding events of 1937, as they pass in review before your eyes. Those of you readers who missed some of those great 1937 news shots may lean back and absorb such events as the tragic Hindenburg disaster, the Coronation and what have you.

Fighting for first honors in the 40 minutes of thrilling news are the latest shots from the Jap-Chinese war in the Far East. Other interesting events include Russia's twentieth anniversary of the revolution; France's new army planes and exciting recordings at the Santa Anita race track.

In the "March of Time" is also recorded the story of the biggest gambling industry in the world, the outfits operating the football pools in Great Britain. Uncle Sam is shown taking to task Japanese fishing interests as the salmon war rages in Alaskan waters.

And of more than ordinary interest to Washingtonian football fans are the remarkable shots of the Redskins-Giants game at New York, where the Washington team made football history.

Do you like bowling?. Then by all means get a load of how to do it at the Trans-Lux this week. Here are real, honest-to-goodness bowling champions showing you just how it is done.

To complete and make perfect the best news show of this year, top it off with a very funny cartoon, in colors, "Who Killed Cock Robin?"

Yes, and there are some mighty fine style showings for milady. A downright good show!

Nelson B. Bell About The Showshops

'Ebb Tide,' in Technicolor, Scores at the Capitol; Earle Has Swift Comedy in 'She Married an Artist'

Homolka and Fitzgerald Lead Cast in Drama of South Seas.

"EBB TIDE." Paramount picturization of a story by Robert Louis Stevenson and Lloyd Osbourne, adapted to the screen by Bertram Millhauser, featuring Oscar Homolka, Ray Milland, Frances Farmer, Barry Fitzgerald and Lloyd Nolan, with Charles Judels, David Torrence, Lina Basquette, Harry Field, George Pitts, Manuello Kalili, Jacques Venaire, Bernard Siegel and native cast. Directed by James Hogan. Previewed Tuesday, December 7. At Loew's Capitol Theater.

A drama of unique pattern is unfolded in this tale of the South Seas. It deals with human derelicts, actuated by the baser passions and piratical lusts that move men to ugly thoughts and vicious deeds. Its principal characters are three beachcombers—one a renegade sea captain deprived of his papers, another a guzzling ne'er-do-well and the third a university man who has come upon evil days—a girl, whose father's vessel has been commandeered by the three after his death, and a murderous maniac, who has "stolen" an island from the French and in his little uncharted kingdom is amassing a fortune in pearls, slaying in cold blood all who stand in his way.

BELL.

From these human negations, Robert Louis Stevenson contrived an unfinished story, completed by Lloyd Osbourne, in which heroics, in the usual sense, have no part, but which builds its dramatic structure upon the futility of the wanderers who strive to steal their way back to respectability. The climaxes are tense and powerful in their evolution of good out of evil by desperate means. A tropical storm at sea provides a tremendously moving spectacle of nature aroused and puny man subdued; the final episode on Attwater's little pearl island is a tragic incident of remorseless retribution that smooths the path for the picture's single slender thread of romance—the love between the college man and the dead skipper's courageous daughter.

Technicolor Becomes Mobile.

All of these violent intervals in the drama's development, as well as the more tranquil periods of sheer Polynesian beauty on both sea and land, are pictured in the improved three-tone Technicolor process that lends the film an unaccustomed realism never before encountered in a screen play of this tempestuous nature. It is, of course, suggestive of what "Mutiny On the Bounty" and "Captains Courageous" might have been had they been executed in natural color. The mere element of color, however, is less important in this instance than the facility with which this comparatively new method of photography at last has been adapted to drama of fast action and tossing oceans. If Technicolor can capture the accelerated tempo of such a play, as well as the effective coloration of scenes of entrancing exotic charm, there is no remaining reason to suppose that natural color is any longer an experiment on the screen.

The principal figures in "Ebb Tide" have been intrusted to a cast of players peculiarly adapted to the requirements of their roles. The three beach combers are impersonated by Oscar Homolka, Barry Fitzgerald and Ray Milland, the first two character actors of the first rank; the third, a younger artist who lends conviction in the part of an educated young man fallen among evil companions. Frances Farmer is proper for her role of the girl, whose ship is pirated and headed for Peru with a supposedly rich cargo that turns out to be worthless, by reason of the completeness with which she is able to convey the impression of both feminine fragility and vigorous strength of character and powerful will. Lloyd Nolan is a finely despicable rogue as Attwater, the consummate villain in the grip of criminal insanity. The lesser characters do not so much matter.

The picture would be notable even if it had no other competent players than Homolka and Fitzgerald. The one is a European actor of high rating on the stage and in foreign-made pictures; the other, familiar to American audiences through his matchless performances with the Abbey Theater Irish Players from Dublin. Their work in "Ebb Tide" is in striking contrast—Homolka a close-lipped and scheming soldier of fortune; Fitzgerald, a wine-bibbling weakling always playing his game on the side of the strong with an eye to the main event and his own pocket. Together they imbue the melodrama with an oddly effective negative strength—a fine tribute to the perfection of their craftsmanship.

A "Swingtime Revue."

The stage bill at Loew's Capitol this week introduces Eddie Peabody as a glib and bouncing master of ceremonies as well as a banjoist, guitarist and violinist of exceptional versatility. He does things with all of these instruments—including a 16-string guitar—that give them new importance as implements of engaging light musical entertainment. With him on the bill, are a considerable group of expert specialists.

Sharing topline honors with the male star is Mitzi Mayfair, among the foremost of the theater's younger dancers, whose contribution to the program was of distinguished merit but not half long enough to satisfy the demands of the audience, who finally were appeased by a brief and graceful speech of thanks.

The bill is opened by the Six Canestrellas in a glorified ladder-balancing act, and also includes Valentine Fox and Emily Walters, in the only ventriloquial act that seriously rivals Edgar Bergen's, and the Three Marshalls, singers familiar over the air.

The Fox Movietone News and Phil Lampkin's orchestra, playing from the stage, augment a bill that is primarily notable for the unusual qualities inherent in its major screen feature.

Three Scamps in the South Seas

The motivating characters in Paramount's Technicolor production of Robert Louis Stevenson's "Ebb Tide," major screen attraction at Loew's Capitol Theater, are three beachcombers, out to plunder their way back to civilization. They are pictured above in the extraordinarily capable persons of Ray Milland, Barry Fitzgerald and Oscar Homolka, reading in the usual direction.

John Boles and Luli Deste Lend Laughter and Spice to a Gay Farce.

"SHE MARRIED AN ARTIST." Columbia Pictures filmization of a story by Avery Hirshorch, adapted to the screen by Gladys Lehman and Delmar Daves, starring John Boles and Luli Deste, with Frances Drake, Helen Westley, Franklin Pangborn, Alexander D'Arcy, Jacqueline Wells, Albert Van Dekker, and Marek Windheim. Directed by Marten Gering. Previewed Monday, December 6. At the Earle Theater.

It is what is popularly known as a hectic life that is led by a temperamental young illustrator and a beautiful designer of feminine fashions when the permit a 5-year-old Parisian romance to be revived in New York and are precipitately married in the face of business contracts that can't wait.

On second thought, that may be a gross misstatement. As it turned out, the contracts, more or less, could wait. It was the artist and his bitterly critical sweetheart who couldn't. Her biting newspaper attacks on her rival creative genius furnished the evidence of her impatience to renew an old infatuation. His immediate rise to the lure of an interview with his old girl, just off the boat, was all the testimony that was needed to betray his own eagerness to pick up where they had left off five years before.

But there was a cynically watchful old harridan, who presided over the artist's establishment, and a model, who toiled there on a pedestal, who had to be taken into consideration and a French male modiste in the other camp—not to mention a few harried business men who somehow seemed to feel that a contract was a contract—also to be taken into account. The marriage was contrived easily enough, but the honeymoon was something else again—that and the delightfully catty rivalry between the model and the new wife.

Boles Comes To Life.

Such is the basis of garbled loves, cross purposes, business competition and hilarious confusion upon which the gayly cyclonic developments of "She Married an Artist" are based. In this subject, Columbia has produced another bit of splendidly executed frivolity that reveals John Boles as a comedian of unexpected spontaneity and mirth and introduces a handsome new feminine star in the vivacious and wholly attractive person of Luli Deste.

Mr. Boles, addicted in the past to roles of considerable dignity and restraint, lets himself go in this one and turns in a performance that puts him well up toward the surprising eminence recently attained by Cary Grant as a formerly serious actor who of a sudden can be very, very amusing in a glib and literate sort of way. Mr. Boles, furthermore, has occasion to sing one song, which he multiplies in effectiveness by caroling it to his regained lady love in two or three different languages—an exceedingly neat trick, even if you can't do it. Mr. Boles can.

This Miss Deste is endowed with many attributes quite as appealing as the vocal proficiency which she may possess but does not disclose in this picture. She is strikingly beautiful, speaks with a faint suggestion of accent and plays with a grace and poise that add a necessary touch of authority to lines and scenes that might be a trifle thin in other less capable hands.

The supporting cast is on a parity with the costars in efficiency. Helen Westley goes in for acidulous comedy, as the vigilant housekeeper, and Frances Drake makes an especially provocative model. Lesser roles are played no less skillfully by Franklin Pangborn, Albert Van Dekker, Alexander D'Arcy—who, by the way, seems to be a versatile young man who can acquit himself well in any manner of sprightly farce (remember "The Awful Truth"?)—and numerous others of excellent selection.

Larry Blake a Hit.

The stage bill, introduced by the richly caparisoned Miss Audrey Sieber—who seemed just a bit confused on one occasion at yesterday's second performance—is headlined by Larry Blake in his "Character Impressions," a neatly turned monologue in the course of which he introduces unannounced impersonations that are about as good as you are apt to happen upon in years of theatergoing. Mr. Blake, borrowed from Universal for this stage tour, is a suave and personable young man with a way about him and an adroit sense of humor.

The vaudeville program is opened by Helen Reynolds and Her Skating Champions, in a series of hazardous roller stunts, and finds Ross and Bennett in the deuce spot with some banter, songs and dances after the remote fashion of Burns and Allen. To close, come the Donatella Brothers and Carmen, piano accordionists and an agile acrobatic dancer, who introduce their parents at the close of the act—the father a soloist on the shepherd's horn; the mother an artiste on the tambourine. And I mean artiste.

Paramount's pictorial resume of highlights in the news of 1937 and Freddie Clark's orchestra further supplement a feature that is guaranteed to keep any audience in high good humor.

In Hollywood

With JIMMY FIDLER

Hollywood, Dec. 10.—Idol Chatter: You never see Garbo in a night club, but she has a standing order with a boulevard music store for all the latest dance records. Things I never expect to see: Jeanette MacDonald indulging in any form of physical exercise. Wonder why Twentieth Century doesn't cash in on the publicity and use those five Canior girls in their papa's next picture? Every girl is a "darling" when addressed by Fredric March.

MacDONALD.

Hollywood incongruities: Elissa Landi on the screen, the last word in chic—and Elissa Landi, dressed in overalls to pick fruit in her orchard. Imagine Charles Bickford cast on a desert island with no one to hear his complaints—what a tragedy! Candidate for the screen's most intellectual beauty: Madeleine Carroll. Getting personal: I would like to see an occasional photograph of Dick Powell without that sweet-sweet smile. Virginia Fields' complexion always reminds me of the Palm Olive slogan.

Claudette Colbert would appreciate it if people would stop pronouncing her last name as though it were spelled "Cole-bear." Cited for the Croix de Merite: Charles Boyer—who interrupted a chorus of stellar beefs about the income tax, to say that they should all praise God for the privilege of having anything to tax. Eleanor Powell's smile has a trick of saying "Let's go places and have fun." If all of Shirley Temple's cute sayings were laid end to end, 90 per cent of them would still be the creation of her press agents.

Along every highway around Hollywood is an army of salesmen, peddling maps which show the location of star homes. They do a hot-house business and—unfortunately—their maps are surprisingly accurate. Yesterday evening, driving through Brentwood, I passed the Temple estate and saw the result. In front of the gate, presumably in the hope of seeing Shirley, were at least 30 people. As I reached another little gate near the north corner of the property, I saw another car stop and a small man slip rather furtively out of the tonneau. He unlocked the gate and darted inside like a hunted criminal. Comedy or pathos? You decide. The man was the father of the screen's most popular child, entering his own home.

In the great United Airport, a mile or so north of the Universal Studio, hangs a sign which proudly proclaims that nothing can stop the flight of the United States mail. The originator of that slogan should have listed one exception. Last week an airliner, loaded with mail for the East, lingered with purring motors for a full 11 minutes past its scheduled flight time. In the shops adjoining the field, a Universal unit was shooting location scenes for a picture. The plane's five passengers were on the sidelines, seeing how movies are made.

The best show in Southern California is staged, not in a theater, but on the Santa Monica pier on those Sundays when Lupe Velez and her Johnny take their yacht, Guadalupe, out for sail. Clad in sea-going dungarees and yachting caps, they parade the length of the pier managing to put a roll in their walk that would, in itself, make the average landlubber seasick. Such a commotion when they embark in their dinghy to be ferried out to the Guadalue, Johnny shouts at Lupe, Lupe screams at Johnee-ee-ee; they both shout to the spectators. All the small boys in the crowd shout back—and then Lupe invariably discovers that she has left something in the car, and they start the whole performance afresh. It takes them a good hour to "shove off" and it is another hour before life on the pier returns to indolent normalcy.

Metropolitan

"SH! THE OCTOPUS." Warner Brothers picturization of the play by Ralph Spence, adapted to the screen by Ralph Murphy and Donald Gallaher, featuring Hugh Herbert and Allen Jenkins, with Marcia Ralston, John Eldredge, George Rosener, Brandon Tynan, Eric Stanley, Margaret Irving and Elspeth Dudgeon. Directed by William McGann. Reviewed Friday evening by Sally Stroud. At the Metropolitan Theater.

"Sh! The Octupus!" is no shushing matter. A screaming satiric knock-down-and-drag-out takeoff on spook stories as they are usually served up in Hollywood, this little item is recommended for all who are weary of heavy-laden "message" movies. It is sheer lunacy. And not so sheer as that, when the cast gets entangled in cobwebs. No orthodox melo-mystery this.

Kelly and Dempsey (Hugh Herbert and Allen Jenkins) are detecatifs. When Kelly is just before becoming a father, a maiden fair rushes outa the bushes a-screaming about how her step-pa is being murdered in the old stone lighthouse, out THAR. The lighthouse has been sold to an artist and he is there already and so is Captain Hook, who has a hook instead of a hand on one arm. Peopling the scene are about seven other characters.

Present also is an octupus, which you might think quints before the body-snatching is over. Doors open and whups the octupus! Corpse hangs from the ceiling; trap doors slide open; voices warn direly from the darkness; Herbert gives out his woo-woo's and Jenkins sleuths flat-footedly. Tis grim.

Somehow, an even larger bunch of folk get together in the lighthouse. Some are dragged in and some just drop in. Eventually everyone turns out to be a secret agent and the submarine, which we forgot to list among the "properties," the octupus a bad old woman who laffs, are all a part of a bad dream of Mr. Herbert's. Mr. Herbert was remarkably good thruout the whole affair. And we are happy about the whole thing.

Marcia Ralston, who looks like Merle Oberon and Joan Crawford, in spite of (or maybe because of) bad makeup, is the s-creaming lady. She will be nice when she learns a bit more about control and diction. Or jerhaps it was the script.

Bad dreams also figure in a cartoon featuring Porky, the Pig, who dreams up a fine dish about how he goes to ancient Greece and meets the monster who turns men into stone. It is all veddy funny. Ray Whitley and his Six-Bar Cowboys deliver some racy range rhythms in an unpretentious short. Young Whitley wears a loud-checked shirt and sings debonairly.

"The Man Without a Country," which is non-irritating flag-waving, presents, in Technicolor, the story of Phillip Nolan. John Litel, in "Alcatraz" a week or so ago, is Nolan. Floyd Gibbons, "Headline Hunter," presents a story about a rescue act performed by two boys when they and some pals were caught swimming in the wrong place.

Paramount News has some excellent shots of the Redskins in New York, especially of Numbers 20 and 33, who would be Messrs. Battles and Baugh. Notably good is the clipping of shots titled "The World in 1937," voiced by Gabriel Heatter.

The feature picture is short, but definitely likeable, if you don't mind slapstick which isn't streamlined. You might as well take the whole family and give them a treat.

Masculine Tibias And Short Hose Win Cinema 'Spot'

Handsome legs will count more than handsome faces, when Director Sidney Franklin selects his thousands of male extras for "Marie Antoinette."

For the first time since the dudes of King Louis XVI's court paraded their silken-clad lower extremities in beauty contests, the masculine calf and ankle will come into their own in knee breeches.

This will be a boon to college football players, hikers, wrestlers and bicycle addicts in the extra ranks, who can cash in on well-developed muscles and symmetrical tibia.

Lawrence Keethe, superintendent of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer wardrobe department, has ordered 20,000 pairs of silk stockings, designed for men only. These will be in both flesh tones and white, with spares in case of "runs." The order, incidentally, calls for service weight, not chiffon, and double strength at heels and toes.

That times have changed is aptly illustrated by the voluminous gowns worn by Norma Shearer, who stars in the film as Antoinette, and her historical companions, the Countess du Barry, Maria Theresa and Mme. de Noailles. No feminine ankle will be permitted to peep from beneath the trailing gowns, many of which, for strict authenticity, contain 30 yards of materials and weigh upwards of 50 pounds.

His Music Lacked Traditional Charm

A musical comedy panic developed on a zoo set at Major Studio today when a big black bear burst from his cage in the midst of a scene for the Bing Crosby-Beatrice Lillie picture, "Doctor Rhythm."

Director, players and technicians scurried for cover, and for several minutes bruin had the set to himself.

Crosby, Mary Carlisle and Director Frank Tuttle peeked out at him from the doorways of handy sound stages. Miss Lillie's face appeared at a window of the administration building, and Andy Devine had locked himself in an automobile Two extras had climbed up on a parallel.

But the bear wasn't on a rampage. Apparently, just a sufferer from claustrophobia, he had burrowed his way to freedom under the barred walls of the cage, located around a corner from where the filming was going on, and was calmly examining camera equipment when collared by trainers.

To prevent repetition of his Houdini act, he was shipped back to the zoo.

Comedians Always Needed for Films

The world's highest prices are paid for beauty and talent in Hollywood—but veteran film makers agree that there never will be an oversupply of one commodity they frantically search for.

Comedy and comedians! That's the Hollywood cry, as the film industry is getting the most concentrated era of funniness it has known since Sennett days.

"There's a definite place for young and handsome actors and actresss, of course, but the real opportunities for film fortunes are in comedy," according to producer Emanuel Cohen.

Right now, the producer is giving a number of young players their opportunities to prove themselves in the field of farce in the production, "Love on Toast." The include Stella Ardler, famous Broadway stage player; John Payne and Katherine "Sugar" Kane. The latter two young players arrived in Hollywood via radio and the stage.

Wheat Declines With Big Crop From Antipodes

Newly Harvested Wheat in Australia Is More Than Double Year Ago.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Dec. 10.—Sharply increased supplies of new-crop Australian wheat did much to force Chicago wheat values down more than a cent a bushel today. Despite predictions that Argentina's official crop report next week would confirm fears Argentina would have but little surplus of wheat for export to Europe during the next 12 months, wheat price rallies here failed to hold. Instead, trade attention focused on the fact that the total of Australian newly harvested wheat now stored in elevators is already 42,496,000 bushels—more than double the amount at this time last year—and rapidly piling up.

At the close Chicago wheat futures were ½-⅞ under yesterday's finish; December, 95⅝@95¾; May, 92¼@92¾; July, 86½@86⅝. Corn unchanged to ⅜ higher; December, 55⅞; May, ⅝@58¾. Oats ⅛ off, rye at ¼ decline to ⅛ advance, and provisions showing 17 to 20 cents setback.

Signs Appear Of Halt in Drop In Steel Trade

Sensitive Scrap Market Indicates Turn in Downward Trend.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 10.—There are increasing signs of a turn in the downward production of steel ingots, which has receded from 80 per cent in the early part of September to about 27½ per cent of capacity this week, Iron Age said today in its weekly review of the industry. After saying the improved situation may not be fully apparent until the December inventory period has passed, the trade publication said:

"The usually sensitive scrap market is beginning to feel this change even without the stimulus of steel mill buying. Not only have declines been checked in most markets, but some advances have occurred, notably at Philadelphia, where export buying coupled with some mill purchases has brought a rise of 50 cents a ton. The Iron Age scrap composite price advanced to $13.08 from $12.92 after an uninterrupted drop from $20.58 in the third week of August.

"Railroad orders are conspicuous in an otherwise quiet market. Orders for about 100,000 tons of rails have been placed within the week. While steel buying generally is still at the stagnation point, there is some encouragement in the fact that a leading Chicago producer had the largest orders in eight weeks. Some of the current business will not be shipped until first quarter. Indications continue to point to a moderate rise in production by mid-January.

"Outstanding among structural steel awards totaling 16,750 tons are 5,150 tons for a tool and die shop for Ford Motor Co. and 3,000 tons for power plants at Bay City and Essexville, Mich., for the Consumers Power Co.

"At a meeting of the European steel cartel at Dusseldorf on Thursday of this week a statement probably will be issued regarding American participation in world export markets."

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively
A Special Correspondent.

Railroad Stocks Held Down by Advance Rate Decision; Wheat Declines; U. S. Bonds Weak.

New York, Dec. 10.—Stocks moved erratically over a narrow range in moderate trading of around 1,100,000 shares. At times the gains and losses in stocks were evenly divided, but the general tendency was to settle back a little. That disposition was especially marked in the late trading when the rails were under pressure, but the closing was steady and dull. United States bonds were mixed. May wheat declined ¾ of a cent to 92⅝ cents a bushel.

Stocks were irregular at the start, sold off before noon and then rallied modestly under the lead of the steels. Railroad shares were firm and acted as though they expected the I. C. C. to act favorably upon their application for an immediate rise in freight rates. That feeling of the market was encouraged shortly before noon when, at his press conference, President Roosevelt said the I. C. C. should do something to "preserve the solvency of the Nation's railroads," and do it quickly. It may have been mere coincidence, but the words were scarcely out of the Presidential mouth when the I. C. C. announced that it had denied the petition. That show of independence, while good for our institutions in the long run, put a damper on the railroad securities.

Selling Resisted.

The market heard the news at the beginning of the fourth hour and for a few minutes an attempt was made to force down railroad shares. That section stood firm after giving up a few fractions, and other stocks that had felt the cooling draught also shrugged and showed they could take it. Most of the rails closed down a fraction to a point. Steels ended near where they began. Specialties fell heavily, in the list being Philip Morris and Eastman. Coppers and silver dipped a point or so. Chemicals softened. More than usual attention was given the various classes of Colorado & Southern at the inactive post. Another sleeper to come to life was Pittsburgh & West Virginia, also at the odd lot post.

Most of the business indices showed declines in activity but in some instances there were indications of a slackening of the pace of the retreat. United States Steel showed another large decline in steel tonnage shipped in November, as compared with October and with the same month of last year. However, the fall from October to November was materially less than that from September to October. Railroad freight car loadings last week rose over the previous (holiday) week, but were down sharply compared with a year ago. Motor car production this week, Ward's reports, show, was slightly below the previous week and not much more than half that of a year ago.

Retail Sales Stubborn.

General Motors divisions were reported as curtailing, rather sharply in some sections, and the strike news at outlying Ford plants was not encouraging. The Federal Reserve Board's index of department store sales showed that in November the stores failed to enjoy the usual seasonal rise. On a daily basis, sales last month ran about 3 per cent under a year ago, which indicates that the retail trade still is well behind the business recession that has overtaken heavy industry.

Week-end changes in the financial position reflect the influences incident to the approaching holiday, the December tax date operations of the Treasury and the movement of funds along international roads as governed by the improvement in the French position. Money in circulation rose $23,000,000, but that was a smaller than seasonal increase. The fall in prices, the recent sharp declines in employment and the general feeling of uneasiness are combining to reduce payroll cash and holiday spending.

Losing Gold.

Meanwhile the Treasury is finding more cash than it has been accustomed to find for a long time without borrowing. Sales of gold to Europe continue, adding to the Treasury's cash resources, and the old age and unemployment taxes continue to roll in. The rise in currency and the loss of gold and the fact that currently the Treasury is doing better with its receipts combine to reduce excess reserves, which dropped $70,000,000 this week. The monetary gold stock fell $10,000,000, which was not the full measure of the loss of gold, since the stabilization fund has sold a good deal, as shown by changes in its deposit accounts.

Gold sales are still a long, long way from bringing on tighter credit, or from creating any speculative alarm, and they are doing much to relieve the Treasury. It is to be hoped that they may continue so long as they have their origin in acquisition of gold by needy foreign central banks and not simply in a flight of funds from this side. Gold flowing out because of nervous capital here would be regarded as a symptom of a disease much in need of a remedy.

SEC Appointment.

Appointment of John W. Hanes, of C. D. Barney & Co., and Jerome N. Frank, a New Deal lawyer, to fill two vacancies on the Securities and Exchange Commission, met with considerable satisfaction in Wall Street, so far as Mr. Hanes was concerned. Perhaps a little too much pleasure was felt over that selection, inasmuch as Mr. Hanes will have plenty of chances to argue his opinions with fellow members of the SEC who have joined a different church. Whether the good, sound, common, economic sense of Mr. Hanes will outvote the radical views of Mr. Frank is a question, but one man on the SEC who understands what the securities markets are all about is far better than none. At any rate the appointment was made to indicate an acknowledgement by the President that some restraint ought to be placed upon the bureaucratic tendencies of the SEC, tendencies which are driving it more and more into regulation for its own sake.

Waste Paper Now Sells for Nothing

New York, Dec. 10 (AP).—Waste paper—of which New York City produces a bumper crop daily—is in the throes of a bear market of unusual intensity, waste material dealers reported today. Formerly willing to pay $4 to $7 a ton for daily accumulations in the business skyscrapers, dealers are now carting it away on a free basis and telling building operators they are lucky not to have to pay for its removal. Collapse of the market, dealers said, followed a slash in the paper mill buying price from around $15 or $16 a ton early this year to $2 a ton. After haulage, sorting and baling the waste cannot profitably be sold at this price, some declared. Principal consumers are paperboard, carton and corrugated paper manufacturers.

P. U. C. Move Suggests Loan Payment Fight

May Oppose Utilities Issuing Stock at Par to Cover Their Debts.

An attack on the practice of utility holding companies in demanding payments of loans to their subsidiaries in stock at par value was indicated yesterday by the Public Utilities Commission when it sent questionnaires on the subject to Federal and local regulatory agencies.

Though officials of the commission declined to specify why the questionnaire was issued, it was learned the issue was raised in contemplation of plans by the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. to retire-short-term loans to the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. of $3,000,000. Indications were this loan, made to the Washington firm for improvements, will soon be retired although no official application has yet been made to the commission

Rule Requires Bids.

A P. U. C. order requires "that applications to the P. U. C. for authority to issue stocks, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness payable in more than one year from date of issuance shall contain a provision that bids will be solicited from at least three responsible unaffiliated financial institutions, at least two of whom shall not be affiliated with or financially interested in the applicant, and that all bids will be submitted to the commission."

Under the order, the proposed A. T. & T. demand for the par value stock repayment would be rejected unless public bids were asked. Should the move be pressed by the telephone company, it is possible the matter would become a test case in the courts.

Value May Be Above Par.

The contention has been made to the P. U. C. that the operating company should be exempt from provisions of the order, and that the company should be permitted to issue stock in payment of its indebtedness to the holding company on a dollar-for-dollar basis, the price of stock to be at par. The commission has not finally passed on the question, but inclines to the view the requirements of the order should be met and that the stock should not be issued at par but at its actual value.

Common stock of the local telephone company totals about $20,000,000, owned entirely by the parent utility company. The latest reports are that it has been paying a $9 dividend per share. This would seem to indicate that its value in the open market would be above its par value of $100 a share.

Justice Van Devanter Avoids Game Rows

Austin, Tex., Dec. 10 (AP).—Willis Van Devanter, retired Supreme Court Justice, is taking no chances of running afoul Texas game laws.

He brought back a buck he killed in South Texas and Gov. James V. Allred obliged by detailing a game warden to take care of shipping it out of Texas. Will J. Tucker, Game Commission secretary, said he would "not be surprised at a former Supreme Court Justice being confused by complex Texas hunting laws."

Aiken Pleads For War Upon State Socialism

New England Has Rebelled Against U. S. Encroachment, He Says.

By the United Press.

Philadelphia, Dec. 10.—New England has rebelled and united against Federal encroachment on State's rights and regional affairs, Gov. George D. Aiken (Republican), of Vermont, tonight told Delaware River basin commissioners in a plea to combat "State socialism" and potential autocracy.

"We need honesty in business. Private industry itself, because of using methods of which it should be ashamed, is responsible for the extent to which we have traveled on the road toward State socialism today," Aiken said.

"But we need honesty in government even more. No private industry ever changed its rules late in the game any faster than the same Federal administration that had urged New England to formulate a (interstate flood control) compact, changed in entering opposition to it after the States had complied with its request," he charged.

"Absolute Control" Sought.

Aiken contended the attitude of the New Deal in this matter and in other ways indicated clearly that "nothing less than absolute control of all natural resources, all industry, all erstwhile free American citizens will satisfy those who are now in high command."

"Were the three centuries of struggle and sacrifice by our forefathers made to the end that their descendants might find places at the public feed trough and feign allegiance to autocracy because they dare not do else?" he asked.

The regional planning bill was the principal target of Aiken's criticism.

Gov. Aiken earlier had criticized the planning bill at a House Rivers and Harbors Committee hearing in Washington.

Jonas Assails Leadership.

Lincolnton, N. C., Dec. 10 (AP).—Charles A. Jonas, Republican National Committeeman of North Carolina, charged today that the party's national leadership had "sacrificed party growth in the South in exchange for 'controlled' votes in the committee and at the conventions."

Jonas, a former Representative in Congress, made public a telegram he sent a magazine which requested his comment upon a recent criticism of Southern members of the committee by Governor Aiken.

Efforts of "respectable Republican leaders in the South," to "purge" what he called "rotten boroughs of the deep South," he asserted, "have met constant opposition by Eastern members of the committee."

"The party organization should be revitalized and nationalized," the telegram concluded, "but let the rebuilding begin where the dry rot started."

D. C. Pedestrian Struck by Truck

Struck down allegedly by a District highway truck while crossing at Third and Quackenbos streets northwest, William D. Hicks, 39, of the 400 block K street northwest, was in Freedmen's Hospital last night in a critical condition. His skull was fractured.

William B. Barber, 31, of 3220 Connecticut avenue northwest, and Ruth V. Crane, 21, of Takoma Park, were treated at the Naval Hospital yesterday after an accident near Annendale, Md., on the Baltimore-Washington Pike. Miss Crane was transferred to Emergency Hospital, and treated for a fracture of the arm and lacerations. Barber remained at the Naval Hospital.

Nicaragua, Honduras Sign Accord on Peace

San Jose, Costa Rica, Dec. 10 (U.P.).—Nicaragua and Honduras tonight signed an accord designed to prevent outbreak of war on the Central American isthmus pending final solution of the "postage stamp" border dispute between the two countries.

The pact, containing provisions for troop withdrawals and other measures to ease the tension which has existed in both republics since last August, was drafted by the "good offices" conference of delegates of the United States, Venezuela and Costa Rica.

Workless Stipends No Bar to WPA Job

By the Associated Press.

The Works Progress Administration announced yesterday a ruling by Administrator Harry L. Hopkins that recipients of unemployment compensation benefits would not be barred from partial WPA aid.

Twenty-one States and the District of Columbia will begin unemployment compensation January 1 to insured workers who lose their jobs. Payments will vary according to State laws, from $5 to $15 a week for 14 to 16 weeks.

The WPA explained those receiving this unemployment compensation would be eligible for WPA aid to bring their total income to a "security wage."

Bob Burns Says—

I honestly believe that no matter how fond you are of any one thing, if you get it in too regular doses, and over a long enough period of time, it'll get mighty monotonous.

I have a friend out here who is a judge in a divorce court and the other day while I was visitin' him, one of them talkative women came bargin' into his office and she says "Judge, I wan'ta get a divorce because I can't live with that man of mine another day!" She says "I been livin' with him for over a year now and I've talked to him but up to now, he hasn't said one word to me and I jest can't stand it no more!" The judge says "Well, in the first place a husband has a right to keep silent if he wants to and then maybe he figgers you do enough talkin' for the two of you."

She says "Well, I admit I do do a lot'ta talkin' and I like to talk, but at least he could'a said 'shut up'!"
